ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

We would like to thank Susannah Smith with the Sumter City-County Planning Department for all her support: providing maps and information, city tours, orchestrating meetings, and opening doors that might have otherwise been locked. In addition, we would like to thank Michael Herr, also with the planning department, for providing all the tax map and GIS data to aid in our research and survey efforts. Brad Sauls, with the South Carolina Department of Archives and History, aided in organizing and selecting the survey areas. Finally, we would like to acknowledge the residents of Sumter who shared information about their neighborhoods, homes, churches, and schools and promised to “spread the word” around the neighborhood so we could complete our “good work.”

I. PROJECT SUMMARY

NAME OF SURVEY

City of Sumter Historic Resources Survey, Sumter, South Carolina

BOUNDARIES OF SURVEY AREA

The survey area is the city limits of Sumter. The irregular boundary includes Poulos Street as the northernmost limits, Perkins and Newberry avenues as the southernmost limits, Emily Drive and Flamingo Road as the easternmost limits, and the eastern edge of the Swan Lake-Iris Gardens, north of West Liberty Street, as the westernmost limits (Figure 1).

NUMBER OF PROPERTIES SURVEYED

There were 2,007 properties surveyed.

AREA SURVEYED

The survey area was comprised of approximately 1.32 square miles within the city limits of Sumter.

BEGINNING AND ENDING DATES OF SURVEY

The project began with a kick-off meeting with the city planning staff, South Carolina State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO) and New South Associates held on December 1, 2009 in order to discuss the agenda and parameters of the survey. Attendees were Mary Beth Reed and Staci Richey of New South Associates, David Kelly and Jennifer Satterthwaite from the South Carolina Department of Archives and History (SCDAH), Susannah Smith and George McGregor of Sumter City-County Planning Department, and architect Scott Bell, who is on the city's Historic Preservation Design Review Committee. A public information meeting was held the following day, December 2, 2009, at the City Centre in downtown Sumter. Those present included Staci Ritchie and Stacey Young of New South Associates, Susannah Smith from the Sumter City-County Planning Department, and approximately 60 local residents. The meeting offered general information about the aims of the project and solicited public input regarding the history and architecture of the city. A second public meeting to present the survey results was held on June 24, 2010 at City Centre and attended by Matt Tankersley and Summer Ciomek of New South Associates, Susannah Smith from the Sumter City-County Planning Department, and approximately 45 local residents

Historical research was conducted in Columbia and Sumter during the month of January 2010. Architectural fieldwork began on March 15, 2010 and was completed April 8, 2010. Production of the survey forms and photographs and additional research was performed during the months of May and June 2010. The writing of the survey report commenced in May 2010. The draft and revised draft reports were submitted in July 2010.

II. PROJECT OBJECTIVES

The purpose of the project is to compile an inventory of historic architectural resources within the city limits of Sumter. The initial project area was delineated by a 1997 reconnaissance-level architectural assessment of Sumter, which established a general boundary for survey-eligible resources (Harvey 1997). The City of Sumter was awarded a grant from the National Park Service, administered by the SCDAH, to conduct an intensive historic resources survey of 2,000 buildings. As over 6,500 parcels lie within the city limits, the potential survey area was divided into nine areas to better define a survey strategy that addressed the temporal and budgetary goals set by the grant.

In consultation with the City of Sumter and SCDAH, three of the nine areas were selected for intensive pedestrian survey. These three areas presented historical themes and communities within City of Sumter that were underrepresented in the city's collective history and represented areas not protected by local, state, or federal historic designation. In addition to the survey of the three areas, Sumter's downtown National Register of Historic Places (NRHP) district was formally surveyed for the state register maintained by SCDAH. The data compiled by the project is intended to help identify individual properties or districts eligible for local district designation or listing in the NRHP. The historical context and subsequent survey also identifies potential historic themes to pursue in future preservation studies and provides the City of Sumter and SCDAH with information needed for citywide planning and preservation initiatives.

III. SURVEY METHODOLOGY

ARCHIVAL RESEARCH AND FIELD METHODS

New South Associates, in accordance with the Survey Manual of the South Carolina Statewide Survey of Historic Properties, undertook this study. The project began with background historical and archival research in Columbia and Sumter. The purpose of this initial research was to develop major historical themes and events that shaped the City of Sumter, as well as to grasp what resources to expect within the city limits. A list of NRHP properties in the City of Sumter was obtained from the SHPO at SCDAH in Columbia. The researcher reviewed survey files and obtained a copy of the 1997 Sumter Preservation Planning Project authored by Bruce G. Harvey of the firm Brockington and Associates. All demographic statistics were retrieved from the Internet.

Project historians retrieved copies of historic maps from the South Carolina Library and the Thomas Cooper Library at the University of South Carolina. Sanborn Fire Insurance maps of Sumter were retrieved from the University of South Carolina's Libraries Digital Collections. Primary and secondary source materials were located at the Sumter County Library and the Sumter County Historical Commission. Informal interviews with local residents were conducted at various stages of research, as well as during the fieldwork phase.

New South Associates and the Sumter City-County Planning Department conducted an introductory public information meeting at the City Centre meeting room in downtown Sumter on December 2, 2009. The purpose of the meeting was to meet with residents in the survey area, explain the survey purposes and methodology, and collect oral history and other information that would aid in understanding the project area.

In order to organize the fieldwork for the dense project area, the city was divided into nine survey areas. Through discussions with Susannah Smith and Brad Sauls, from SCDAH, the nine areas were prioritized by need and amount of previously recorded information. Since little information about the development and architectural makeup of the predominantly African-American communities existed, these residential areas were given priority. It was determined that the focus of this survey would be on the following survey areas:

- South Sumter – Identified as Area 8 by the city, this survey area encompasses the area between K and Bailey streets to the west, Grant and Logan streets to the east, the railroad corridor to the north, and Perkins Avenue and Monroe Street to the south. The Bates, Savage-Glover, and Stone Hill neighborhoods are all located in this survey area.
- Oakland Avenue – Identified as Area 7 by the city, this survey area includes the areas between South Guignard Drive to the west and South Washington Street and West Oakland Avenue to the east, while the northern limits are at West Liberty Street and the railroad corridor comprises the southern boundary. The Birnie and South Liberty neighborhoods are located in this survey area.

- Northern Sumter – Identified as Area 3 by the city, this survey area covers the area between Carolina Avenue to the west, North Lafayette Drive to the east, Moore Street to the north, and East Charlotte Avenue, Crescent Avenue, and Broad Street to the south. Crosswell, Morris College, and Folsom Park neighborhoods are situated in this survey area (Figure 2).

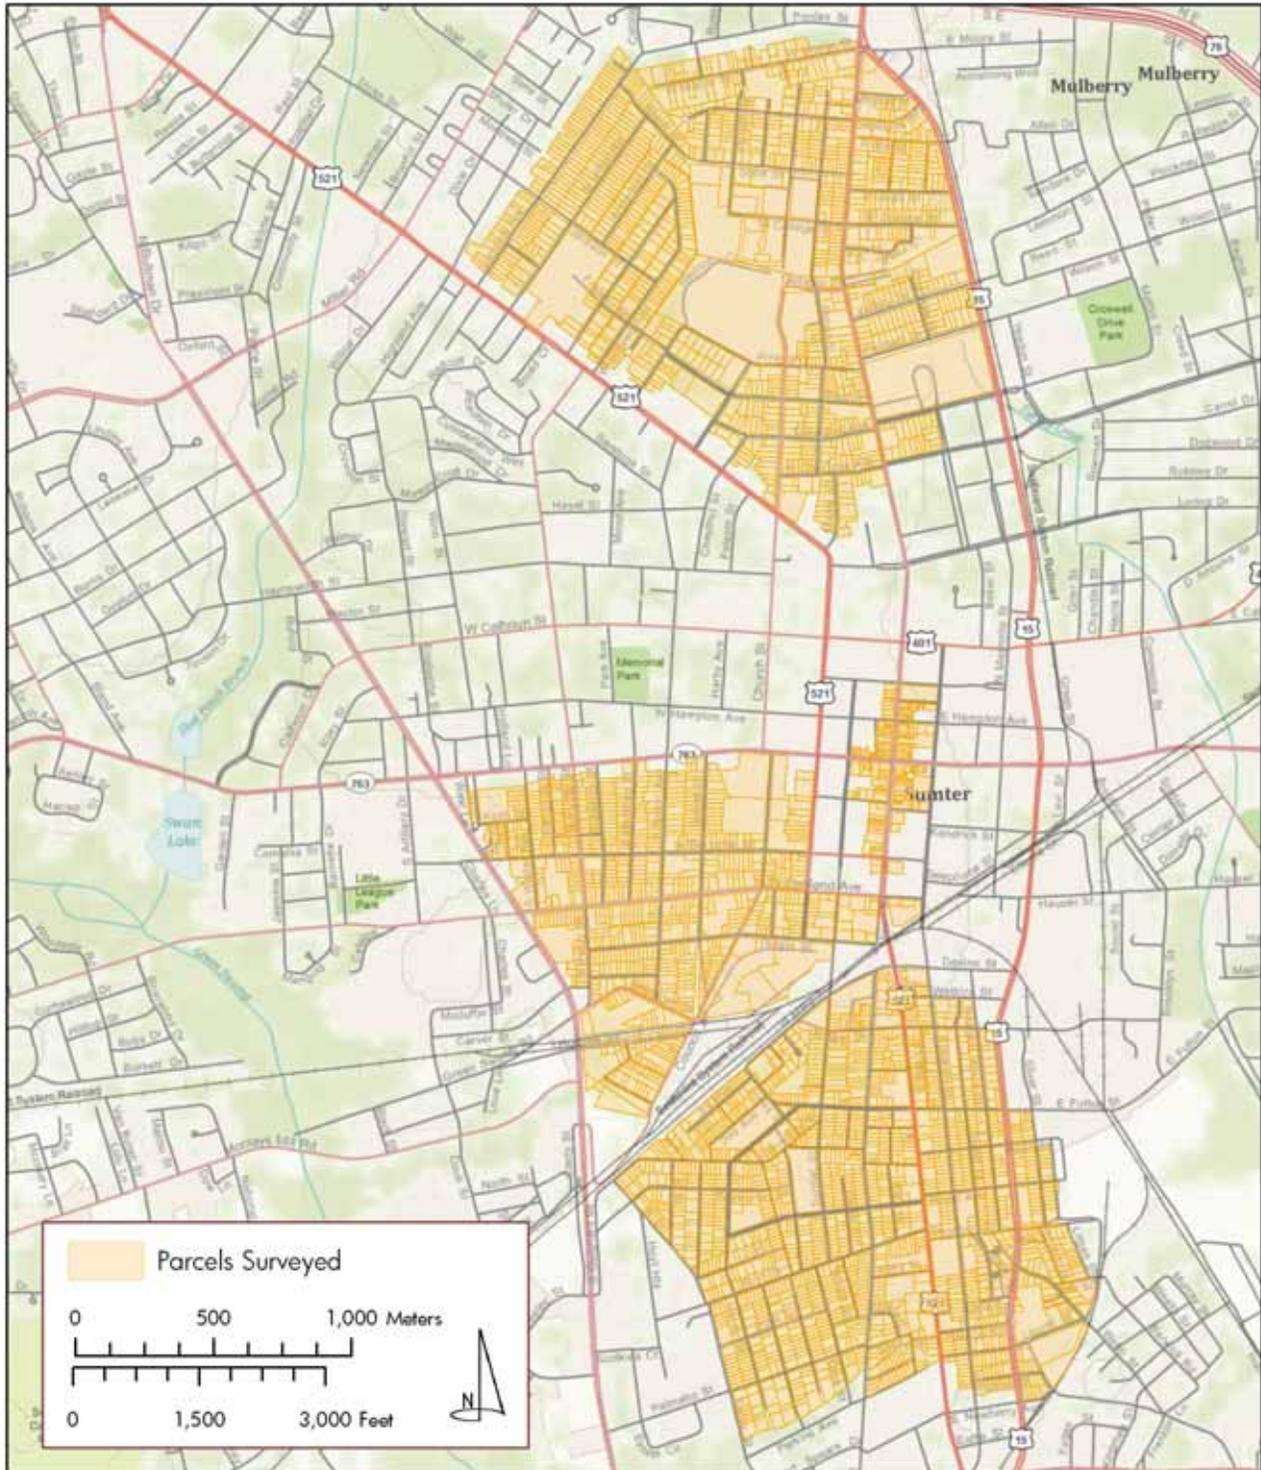

Two survey teams, each consisting of an architectural historian and a photographer, completed the survey work within Sumter. The architectural historian entered data into a Trimble Unit, a hand-held GPS device. With the South Carolina Statewide Survey of Historic Resources Intensive Survey form uploaded into the Trimble Unit, the historian recorded information into the form and recorded the location of the resource. The photographer took digital photographs of each resource and maintained a photo log. Information received from the tax assessor database was used to determine the date of construction of the majority of the resources. Additionally, surveyors spoke with residents of the surveyed neighborhoods in order to gain a better comprehension of the history and development of the area.

New South Associates preliminarily evaluated all identified resources for their potential eligibility for listing on the NRHP. The NRHP is the official Federal register of properties that are historically and/or architecturally significant. Resources are evaluated under four criteria: A, B, C, and D, as outlined in 36 CFR Part 602, National Register of Historic Places, Nomination by State and Federal Agencies and 36 FCR Part 800, Advisory Council on Historic Preservation, Protection of Historic and Cultural Properties. The four criteria for evaluation are:

- A. Properties that are associated with events that have made a significant contribution to broad patterns of our history;
- B. Properties that are associated with lives of persons significant in our past;
- C. Properties that embody the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction or that represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction; and
- D. Properties that have yielded, or may be likely to yield, important information in prehistory or history.

The survey was conducted from the public right-of-way and all eligibility assessments were based on exterior architectural details, setting, outbuildings, and other features visible from the public right-of-way. Survey forms and photographic prints, which meet NRHP archival standards, were produced for the SCDAH and for the Sumter City and County Planning Office.

IV. HISTORIC CONTEXT

DEVELOPMENT OF SUMTER COUNTY

EARLY PERIOD

The colony of South Carolina originated with the establishment of Charleston, originally Charles Town, in 1670. Many of the initial settlers emigrated from Barbados, bringing with them an economy based on plantation agriculture, the production of cash crops, and the use of enslaved Africans as a labor force. Other groups soon joined these early settlers, including French Huguenots, who settled in the lower Santee River. In 1701, English explorer John Lawson journeyed up the river, encountering the Santee and Wateree Indians along the way. He was one of the first Europeans to visit the High Hills of the Santee, one of which he described as an "Alp with a top like a sugar loaf," referring to the sandy nature of the hills (Lawson 2001[1709]:25).

European settlement did not occur in the interior of South Carolina until after the Yemassee War of 1715. Both the Wateree and Santee Indians supported the Yemassee in their attempt to destroy the colony. When the Yemassee were defeated, the Wateree and Santee Indians retreated toward the Catawba settlements, in the upper north section of present day South Carolina (Nicholes 1975:66). Even with the Wateree and Santee Indians vacating their lands, European settlement in the interior was slow and did not really begin until the establishment of the township system in the 1730s.

A road that roughly followed an old Catawba path used by Indian traders as early as the 1680s became the main thoroughfare between Charles Town and Fredericksburg. Fredericksburg, located near what is now Camden, was one of the original nine townships established in 1734. It was located on the east side of the Wateree River, north of the project area, and was an important interior settlement. With the rise of local settlement, the path was made a public road in 1753. This road, now known as State Route 261, has had many names throughout its usage: the Great Charleston Road; the Charleston and Camden Road; the Back Country Road; and the King's Highway (Nicholes 1975:31, 37; Kreisa et al. 1996).

LOCAL SETTLEMENT AND STATEBURG

By the 1750s, what is now Sumter County was identified as St. Mark's Parish and the "District East of Wateree River" (Nicholes 1975:67). Settlers started to move into the area, often favoring the High Hills of the Santee (around what is now Stateburg). The first local settler on record was Isaac Brunson, from New England, who moved to the area in 1740 after getting a land grant "near a place called the High Hills" (Nicholes 1975:65). James Brunson, Robert Carter, Wood Furman, Josiah Gayle, Peter Mellett, Charles Pinckney, and William Richardson, as well as the Rutledges, Singletons, and Haynesworths soon followed (Nicholes 1975:66). Others, many of whom set up summer homes in the High Hills to escape the heat and disease of Charleston and the low country, soon joined these people. The land grants at that time were rarely more than 500 acres each (Gregorie 1954).

Wherever soil was fertile, plantations were established for the cultivation of the main cash crops of the eighteenth century: indigo and rice. One of the oldest houses still standing in the area is the Borough House Plantation. The main core was constructed in 1758 and was the only residence when the town of Stateborough (now Stateburg) was laid out (Anderson 1988).

The High Hills area played an important part in the American Revolution after Charleston fell to the British in May of 1780. Camden became an important British outpost, and the road between Charleston and Camden was the scene of much skirmishing between the British and local Patriots. The houses in the High Hills provided lodging for both sides. Lord Cornwallis stayed at the Borough House on his way to Camden, and it later served as the headquarters for American General Nathanael Greene (Anderson 1988). Bloom Hill, the home of Captain William Richardson, was used by John Rutledge, governor of South Carolina, and by Francis Marion, the "Swamp Fox" (Nicholes 1975:31-32; Gregorie 1954:54; Jason Smith, personal communication, October 2006).

One well-known Patriot center was the High Hills Baptist Church, organized as early as 1772 by Reverend Joseph Reese. It was re-situated to its present site some years later, on land purchased from General Thomas Sumter (Nicholes 1975:45; High Hills Baptist Church historical sign). The story of Thomas Sumter is intertwined with that of the entire region, not only during the war, but also in the years that followed.

General Thomas Sumter was probably the most famous of the many South Carolinians who served the Revolutionary cause in the 1770s and 1780s. Born in Virginia in 1734, he moved to South Carolina before the outbreak of war. He kept the Patriot cause alive in South Carolina after the fall of Charleston and the defeat of Horatio Gates at the battle of Camden in August of 1780. Because of this service, he was handsomely rewarded with lands and honors in the years after the war. During the post-war period, he established his residence in the High Hills, calling it "Home Place." He lived there with his wife, Mary Cantey, until her death in 1817. Following her death, General Sumter often lived elsewhere until his own death in 1832, but he kept his residence, Home Place, for his children.

One particular ethnic group may trace their start to Sumter's arrival in the High Hills after the Revolution. Known locally as the "Turks," the original settler, Joseph Benenhaley and another man named Scott, perhaps a Frenchman with an assumed name, have a mysterious origin (Trillin 1969:104). They were rumored to have been followers of General Sumter during his campaigns, one as a bugler and the other as a scout. Their descendants have a darker complexion than their white counterparts. In 1790, the state legislature ruled that this population of Sumter County be subject to the same laws as whites, rather than the negro laws. The legislation, which General Sumter reportedly facilitated, referred to the dark-skinned population as Moors, or subjects "of the Emperor of Morocco" (Orr 1992). This was likely in reference to these men and their families, which resided in the county between Stateburg and Dalzell (Work Project Administration [WPA] 1941:312). Subsequent generations married both members of their race as well as whites, and the descendants numbered over 300 by 1950 (Gregorie 1954:467-468).

In 1783, Sumter and other prominent residents in the High Hills developed plans for a village that would be centered on the High Hills Tavern, using the Charleston-Camden Road as the main street. The site was laid out with lots for residences, as well as businesses. Originally called “Stateborough”, later changed to “Stateburg,” the community was a contender for the new state capital, which the legislature planned to relocate from Charleston. Even though Stateburg lost out to Columbia, it did become the seat of the new “Claremont County,” which covered the local area from 1783 until the South Carolina legislature abolished county governments altogether in 1800 (Nicholes 1975:44, 68, 110).

With the abolition of county governments came the establishment of the district system, which remained in effect in South Carolina until after the Civil War. In honor of General Thomas Sumter, the local area was designated “Sumter District” in 1800 (Nicholes 1975:47). The district was divided into various townships, and most of these remain in effect today. One of these was Stateburg Township, which included everything in the Stateburg area from the Wateree River to the easternmost branch of Long Branch. The district seat was moved from Stateburg to a new location laid out in 1801-1804. It was named “Sumterville” in honor of General Thomas Sumter (Nicholes 1975:56, 107).

Sumterville’s commissioners soon signed contracts for the construction of a few necessary public buildings, including the courthouse and jail. In 1802, a store opened near the courthouse, which was not completed until 1806. The town also had a tavern that served the small population (Gregorie 1954:90-92).

ANTEBELLUM ERA

During the first half of the nineteenth century, the plantation system reached its peak in the American South, which included South Carolina. The invention of the cotton gin in the 1790s allowed the expansion of cotton cultivation throughout the region. This cash crop quickly assumed prominence in the general project area. The years that followed saw a periodic rise and fall in local cotton prices, as the need for cotton fluctuated in Europe, and planters migrated west.

Between 1820 and 1860, almost 200,000 white settlers left South Carolina for new lands, taking with them almost as many enslaved African Americans (Edgar 1998:275-277). Cotton continued to be the main cash crop despite the growing threat of soil exhaustion. By 1860, the plantation system was firmly entrenched throughout the project area, and African-American slaves comprised around 70 percent of the local population (Kreisa et al. 1996).

The plantation system was strengthened by the expansion of the first railroads. One of the first railroads in the world outside of Britain was constructed near what is now North Augusta, South Carolina. A railroad from Wilmington, North Carolina to Columbia, South Carolina was constructed in the 1850s. In the vicinity of the project area, it ran south of Stateburg. The railroad was a boost to local economic development, especially around the community of Manchester, which for a while was the terminus of what was formally called the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad. Previously established in the 1790s, Manchester became a cotton port, due to its access to the railroad and Wateree River.

Even though Stateburg was no longer the largest community in the Sumter District, it was still one of the wealthiest. It never lost its standing as a prominent social center for the region. The homes of Stateburg, scattered among the tops of the High Hills, were paragons of elegance. Unfortunately, most of these old homes and summer residences are no longer standing (Nicholes 1975:45-48).

CIVIL WAR

The seeds that led to the Civil War were planted long before the 1860s. South Carolina had considered disunion as early as the 1820s and 1830s, during the Nullification Controversy. The state championed secession during the 1850 Compromise, and South Carolinians, including some from Sumter District, moved to the Kansas Territory in the 1850s to fight for the right to own slaves (Edgar 1998:347).

On December 20, 1860, the South Carolina State Convention voted unanimously to secede from the Union. Residents and leading citizens of Sumter initiated a number of associations to offer support for their troops from the home front, including the Sumter Volunteers and Wayside Homes to assist traveling soldiers. They also set up hospitals for sick or wounded soldiers. Centrally located and hosting important railroad lines, Sumter was ideally suited for its use by the Confederacy as a distribution center for military supplies. South Carolina was the first state to secede after the election of Abraham Lincoln, and the war itself began in Charleston Harbor in April of 1861.

Before the year was out, Federal ships and troops had firm control over much of the coastal Beaufort District. By the following year, they had moved into position to begin the long siege of Charleston. This siege would not end until Sherman's troops entered Columbia and forced the Confederates to evacuate the coast in February of 1865. By that point, the war only had two more months to go.

The Sumter District was not directly affected by the war until the very end. Before that time, there were reports of slave uprisings in the area, but these are not believed to have been serious (Edgar 1998:367). Sherman's invasion of the Carolinas was another matter. His army of 60,000 marched through Columbia, burned the capital, and then continued north and west of the Sumter District, destroying railroads and supplies as it moved toward North Carolina. With the coast occupied by the Federals and Sherman cutting through the central part of the state, the area around Sumter District formed a Confederate island stuffed with railroad cars and supplies from the surrounding regions. To remedy this situation, Sherman detailed Brigadier General Edward E. Potter to lead an expedition out of Georgetown to destroy this rolling stock.

Potter's Raid began in early April 1865 with a force of 2,700. Marching northwest out of Georgetown, Potter's forces scattered the local militia just south of Sumter on April 9th at the Battle of Dingle's Mill. Potter then moved westward along the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad, destroying railroad stock and tracks as he went. At Manchester, he turned northward along the Charleston-Camden Road. On April 14th, the 25th and the 107th Ohio infantry regiments were ordered toward Stateburg. The few remaining Confederate forces in the area, namely the Ninth Kentucky mounted infantry and some South Carolina militia, succeeded in holding them off. Potter then brought up the rest of his forces and attacked on April 15, 1865 in what has been called the Battle of Stateburg. Unable to break the Confederate line, Potter went around Stateburg to the east and continued toward Camden. After occupying Camden for a brief period, the Federals returned the way they had come, meeting resistance north of Stateburg at the Battle of Beech Creek (April 19, 1865). This time, the Confederates were driven from their position in what has been described as the very last action of the war in South Carolina (The Beech Creek Historical Association and Sumter County Historical Commission 1997).

THE POSTWAR ERA

The Civil War ended slavery but settled only a few of the other problems that plagued a heavily race-divided and class-divided society. Reconstruction attempted to make changes that favored the local freedmen, such as guaranteeing voting rights, but many of these changes proved to be fleeting. Other alterations were made to state and local government, and these included abolishing the districts and bringing back the county system.

Because of the war, many local landowners were ruined financially, and there were few others with the resources to take their place. This can be seen in the local deed records, with the increase in public auctions, where large holdings were sold for a fraction of their pre-war cost. The growing number of small farmers began to organize for the first time, and this led to the rise of The Grange (The Patrons of Husbandry) in the 1870s. There was a large Grange chapter in the Manchester area of Sumter County (Edgar 1998:430). Yet, by the end of Reconstruction, power shifted back to Wade Hampton and the white aristocracy that had ruled the state before the war.

The Atlantic Coast Line Railroads helped Sumter County recovery quickly from the war years, allowing commercial and passenger traffic through the town. Sumter County served as a major cotton market and shipping center, due in large part to the railroads. Sumter County also hosted several industries in the final decades of the 1800s, including a textile mill, a cotton oil company, and an ice-manufacturing company. Electricity and municipal water improved the city during the 1880s and 1890s, and new railroad lines connected Sumter County to major transportation routes (Gregorie 1954:317, 483-484; Good 2006:940).

During the 1880s and 1890s, most African Americans were effectively disenfranchised by a combination of political intimidation, poll taxes, and literacy requirements. When necessary, gerrymandering was also used. The Seventh Congressional District, drawn up in 1882 and known as the "black district," stretched from Beaufort to Sumter. This district was created to isolate the large black majority in these areas (Edgar 1998:415-416).

The election of Benjamin Tillman to governor in 1890 marked the end of the old pre-war elite in South Carolina politics. From bastions in the white majority counties in the upland, Tillman and the small farmers and businessmen that comprised his base, upended what was left of the old political order. This development had relatively little impact on Sumter County, which remained a conservative holdout throughout much of this period (Edgar 1998:436-437). Openly racist, he pushed for a new state constitution in 1895 that continued the disenfranchisement of African Americans (Kantrowitz 2000:48). It also made it easier to create new counties. One of these was Lee, formed from part of the northeast portion of Sumter County (Edgar 1998:447).

While growth after the war was due to the railroads, Sumter County's growth during the early 1900s can be attributed to a focus on changes in local government. A new movement among municipalities to run their local governments like businesses led to an unprecedented change in Sumter County. In 1912, the City of Sumter became the first in the nation to adopt the council-manager form of municipal government. Such a government utilizes a full-time qualified manager to administer the complexities of day-to-day municipal management, employed by a city council, which serves as a board of directors in charge of policy decisions. The town's last railroad line was also built that year, a bookend event for a period of railroad growth since 1852 (Gregorie 1954:402, 480; Good 2006:940).

The City of Sumter modernized in several areas between 1900 and 1920. Main Street was paved with brick for several blocks in 1908, and the downtown commercial district was full of service and retail shops. Several industries in town greatly helped the economy and processed the crops flowing in from the surrounding county. A new library, several new schools, and social clubs marked the early 1900s (Nicholes 1981:31, 33-35).

The Great Depression took a heavy toll on South Carolina, which had never fully recovered from failed cotton crops and boll weevil infestation. In an attempt to correct some of the worse excesses of over-cultivation, the federal government, under Franklin D. Roosevelt, began purchasing large tracts of over-used and cutover land. This land was then often transferred to state governments to oversee (Roth 2002). This happened to an area south of Stateburg in Sumter County, which would become Poinsett State Forest. Years later, much of this forest would be transferred back to the federal government to become the Poinsett Weapons Range, with the rest becoming what is now known as Manchester State Forest.

Sumter County had its own struggles, but with its diverse economy, composed of processing agricultural goods, rendering services, and offering retail, it did not have as hard a time as some areas in the state. Manufacturing continued to prosper and offered much needed employment, with many of the workers ex-farmers. One such example was Polly Prentiss, Inc. Polly Prentiss, Inc. was started around 1933 in the midst of the Depression, expanding within five years (Poindexter 1989:143, 162). The Coca-Cola bottling plant located in the City of Sumter also fared well during the 1930s (Poindexter 1989:166-167).

In the early 1940s, the creation of Shaw Air Force Base several miles west of the City of Sumter turned former farmlands into a bustling military base. While during the war a heavy influx of servicemen's families strained the housing in the City of Sumter, the city quickly compensated, satisfying the new demands of an increasing population (Gregorie 1954:490). As the automobile became more popular, a new highway system began crossing the state. The railroad decreased in popularity as trucks took to the new highways, though it continues to serve an important function. The City of Sumter's industries and economy fared well in the adaptation to road transportation, but eventually the sprawl of the town and new suburbs drew business away from the downtown area, which suffered a decline in the late 1900s. In 1997, the downtown area entered a new period of revitalization and now contributes to the City of Sumter's strong economy (Good 2006:940).

CITY OF SUMTER HISTORIC CONTEXT

The City of Sumter is the largest city or town in the county, and as the historic county seat, has benefited as a transportation and commerce center. Begun as early as 1800, the city grew slowly but reached a boom period in the late 1800s through early 1900s. While very few buildings remain from the City of Sumter's early years, the downtown commercial district and many nearby residences reflect the architectural styles popular around the turn of the twentieth century. Subsequent growth and changes to the town, which included expanding residential neighborhoods to the north, west, and south, and expansive industrial properties to the east and southeast, affected the character of the built environment. The introduction of Shaw Air Force Base in 1941 introduced a new catalyst for residential and commercial growth northwest of the downtown area. Like any city, Sumter has a mix of churches, commercial buildings, schools, and residences. However, the driving influences that helped shape the city's buildings and landscape include a central location, transportation networks, agricultural and industrial businesses, and a citizenship that built a wide variety of homes. The City of Sumter of today is a direct descendent of the choices made by earlier residents; their buildings, parks, railroads, and warehouses create a dense and vibrant city rich with historic buildings, sites, and landscapes.

ANTEBELLUM ERA

The creation of the Sumter District, and subsequently Sumterville as the district seat in 1800, did not immediately generate a local government with any authority. The Sumter District was essentially a useful tool for the court system but could not own property or make contracts. It did not have a governing body to administer a local government, so the early development of the area was under the purview of “various boards of commissioners appointed by the General Assembly” (Gregorie 1954:89). There were commissioners for public buildings, including the courthouse and jail, and commissioners for roads and bridges as well as for paupers (Gregorie 1954).

The commissioners for public buildings immediately chose a location for the courthouse and jail, which would essentially create the new district seat, named Sumterville. In a “rather low and poorly drained section, at some distance from a navigable stream and even from a highway,” the courthouse location caused some surprise and perhaps concern (Gregorie 1954:90). Indeed, the location was some 15 miles from a navigable water source; and therefore, inconvenient for trade. It was near to and formerly part of the farm of John Gayle, whose home was to be used as the temporary court building. The modest one-story building had a piazza on the south side, and it stood in what would later be a street corner in Sumterville (Ramsey and Green 1922:9).

The courthouse was located on the corner of the only two streets in the new town, but the construction was poorly done and the building required repairs even before its completion in 1806. It was likely a wood-framed building and was soon accompanied by a nearby tavern and a store. Given the poor setting and potentially malarial conditions of low-lying areas, residences did not appear as rapidly. Twelve years after its establishment, Sumterville was mistaken by a traveler for a “well-settled plantation” instead of a small town (Gregorie 1954:91). Just two years later, there were a handful of residences, owned by a carpenter, a surveyor, storekeeper, sheriff, state attorney general, physician, and a half dozen more people. Most likely, their homes were wood-frame with weatherboard siding, a typical pattern for the early 1800s. One home from the era that still stands in the City of Sumter is the Wilder-Kendrick House, reportedly constructed around 1808 when Daniel Rose purchased over 200 acres in the southeast part of the village. Located on what was then Laurence Street, later named Magnolia Street in honor of the many trees along the road, the house was situated only a block south of the main east-to-west Liberty Street, and suggests how sparsely developed the village was at the time. The house was built with pegged timbers and changed in both ownership and appearance throughout the nineteenth century (Gregorie 1954:91-92; Nicholes 1981:401-402).

Sumterville gradually attracted new residents from the New England area, Jews migrating from Spain and Portugal, by way of Charleston, and immigrants directly from Scotland and Ireland. For Sumterville’s first 20 years, religious services were occasionally held in the courthouse because there was no church. This eclectic group of incoming residents soon added to the town’s buildings and created a dozen houses by 1824, established a Baptist church in 1820 and a Presbyterian church in 1823. In 1820, the state’s Board of Public Works decided to build a new courthouse for the Sumter District in Sumterville (Figure 3). Using plans from Robert Mills, the state erected the district's second courthouse from brick, with a temple-type façade reflecting the classic revival elements so typical of Mills' work. Undoubtedly, this impressive building brought a new ideal of architectural character to the town and conveyed the message of permanence for a fledgling community. The construction of the new courthouse and churches constituted a short growth spurt in the 1820s for Sumterville, and the county gained almost 3,000 residents during the same decade, reaching 28,277 by 1830 (Gregorie 1954:94-97; Good 2006:940; U.S. Department of the Census 1820, 1830).

By the early 1830s, Sumterville held 20 homes with two local newspapers competing for the attention of the small population. Two schools were operating, and the community began to grow as new residents built additional homes. The town incorporated in 1845, with the official boundaries creating a square, the sides of which extended three-quarters of a mile from the courthouse in the four cardinal compass directions (Gregorie 1954:97). The act of incorporation appeared to make a positive difference in the town, which had been previously perceived as a "theater of much dissipation" (Gregorie 1954:97). After 1845 (the year the town was incorporated), sidewalks lined the streets, newly planted shade trees improved the landscape, night police offered improved security and the courthouse enlarged to almost double its size. Churches improved their buildings, owners improved old warehouses, and as the town boomed through 1849, the carpenter's hammer and the mason's trowel could be "heard in every direction" (Gregorie 1954:99). Leading citizen Andrew Jackson Moses built a large I-house (a vernacular house type popular at the time) on a 42-acre tract of land that eventually became part of the town, along Washington Street.

Growth continued into the 1850s. By 1850, the town had 840 residents, 330 of whom were slaves, residing in 90 houses. The county population also swelled from 27,892 in 1840 to 33,220 in 1850. The growth likely had to do with the new railroad planned for the City of Sumter. The state's first branch line (finished in 1842) allowed trade between Columbia and Charleston, but this earlier route bypassed Sumterville (Poindexter 1989:70). The railroad finally entered Sumterville in 1852 from the Camden Branch. The town reincorporated in 1855 with the shortened name "Sumter," but many of the old homes of the antebellum era were subsequently "rolled to new sites and have been remodeled" (Gregorie 1954:99, 105, 160, 168; U.S. Department of the Census 1840, 1850).

William J. Brunson moved his family to town in 1850, and his young son, Joel, went on to later recount the bustling "village" of Sumterville in his writings. The center of town was the intersection of Main and Liberty streets, and buildings were constructed at the intersection and extended in every direction. A blacksmith shop with a large door, a long single-story store filled with goods from New York, and large houses with piazzas graced the town center. Other houses were one and two stories, often with porches or piazzas, with scatterings of wheelwrights, wells supplying cool, sweet water, and only a single brick house, not surprisingly the home of the village's only brick maker. A carriage shop, a bark mill, a church, and a shoe shop accompanied a few homes on one street, and the irregular, unplanned growth of the village organically grew as the villagers engaged in business or established their homes. Several homes and businesses were on raised foundations, and some commercial buildings measured around 16x20 feet or 20x30 feet with simple signage to market their services along Main Street (Gregorie 1954:100-104).

The railroad helped shape the land use and development of the City of Sumter. The earliest railroad through town arrived in 1852, the same year that the Bank of Sumter was incorporated. Named Wilmington and Manchester Railroad, this line extended from the west part of Sumter District in the town of Manchester, east through Sumter, before traveling onto Wilmington, North Carolina. At the Manchester junction, it joined a line stretching west to the capital city of Columbia, making this railroad a major transportation route between the centrally located markets of Columbia and the port city of Wilmington. Sumter's location along this main route made it an ideal junction for added lines throughout the last half of the nineteenth century and into the twentieth century. However, the railroad may have facilitated an unforeseen migration away from Sumter County, as the population dropped from 33,220 in 1850 to just 23,859, including 16,682 African Americans, in 1860. The number of farms also fell, from 1,343 to 889, during the same period (Figure 4) (Gregorie 1954:168; Morgan 1986:15; U.S. Department of Census 1850, 1860).

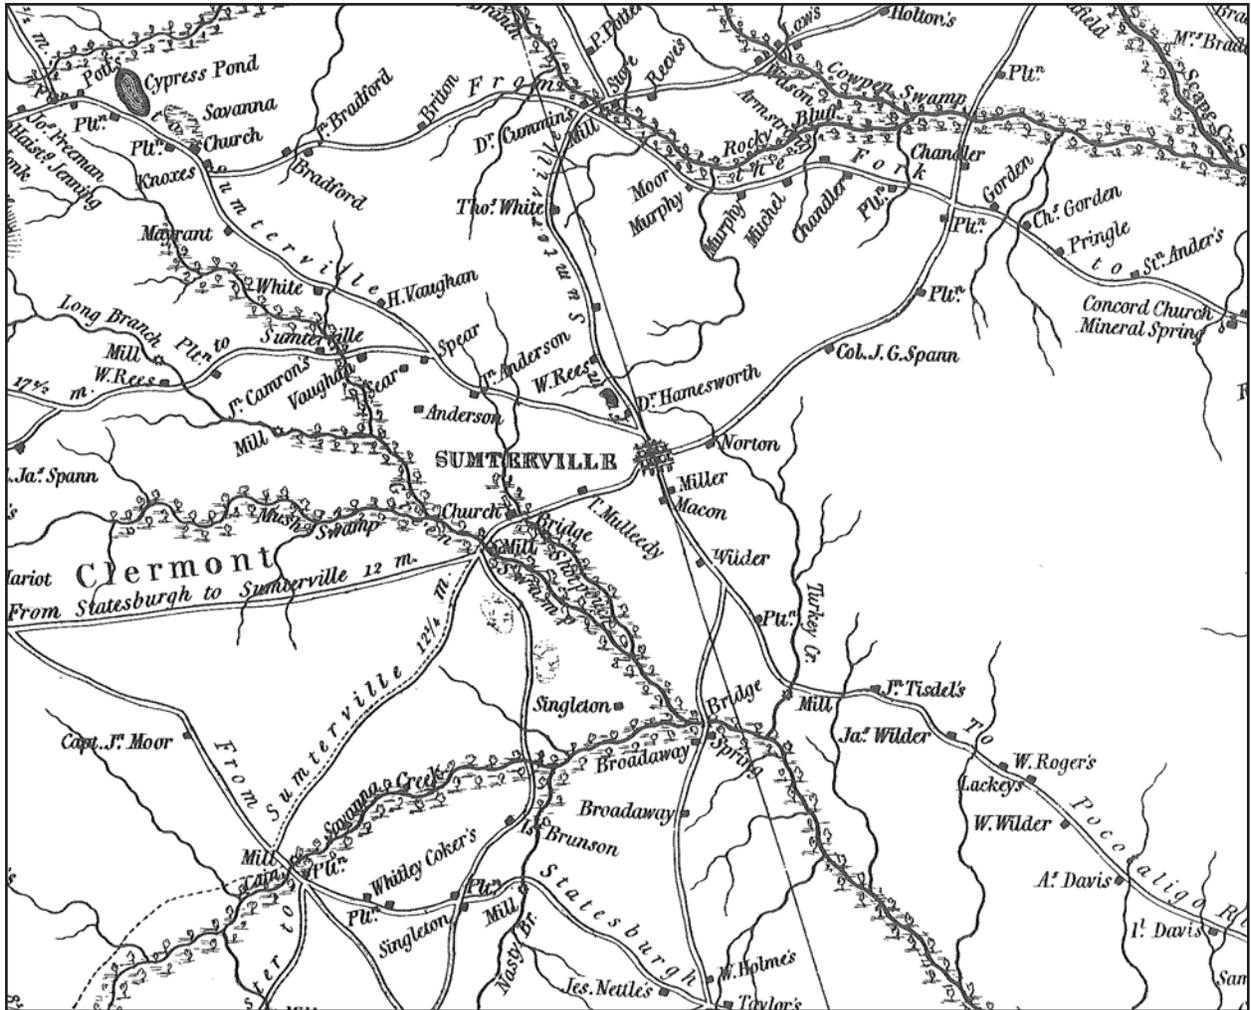

By the early 1850s, the Sumter Cemetery was established, located just west of the town on West Oakland Avenue. Though set amidst a wooded area, its adherence to contemporary practices of placing cemeteries outside of the city center is further proof of the City of Sumter's modernization. An African-American cemetery is located east of Sumter Cemetery and is the location that some slaves and ex-slave burials have been relocated there from the South Carolina Methodist Conference Cemetery (Nicholes 1981:378-379, 381).

CIVIL WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION ERA

The railroad inherently encouraged development close to the line, and it became an important component of the town during the Civil War. Women set up tables at the depot near the tracks to serve meals to arriving soldiers, and during inclement weather, they used a nearby hotel (Gregorie 1954:257). Even though surrender at Appomatox happened on April 9, 1865, the news did not immediately reach the South and thus, came too late to spare the city from the raid of General Edward E. Potter that same month. Potter reportedly considered the city a prime target for its strategic location, rich cotton lands, its hospital facilities, and its munitions depot. Residents scrambled to hide valuables in the nearby swamps in anticipation of the marauding soldiers that were sure to accompany the Yankee general. Potter reached town after a skirmish at Dingle's Mill and set up headquarters, reportedly in the impressive Altamont Moses mansion on Washington Street, while his soldiers set up several temporary camps (Nicholes 1981:463-464).

The destruction wreaked by Potter's raid included the burning of the railroad depot, railroad shops, and cotton warehouses, as well as the old and the new jails. Union soldiers also went from home to home seeking contraband weapons and searching for food, money, or other valuables. Upon leaving the City of Sumter in various directions, the soldiers destroyed railroad tracks, trestles, and boxcars, reportedly dismantling the railroad for six miles in each direction. Practically all of the African Americans in the City of Sumter were "lured into following" Potter with the promise of "40 acres and a mule" (Nicholes 1981:464). About 1,000 blacks from the City of Sumter and the surrounding area joined the mass exodus of freed slaves from the South behind the Union Army. This loss of labor and the disheartening destruction in the town did not discourage the Sumterites for long. The "valiant people, ready to fight for their homes and to die for their beliefs, now began the long struggle to rebuild from the ashes of their beloved city" (Nicholes 1981:465).

TURN OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

The last few decades of the 1800s, as well as the early years of the 1900s, constituted an era of unprecedented growth in the City of Sumter. The county's population continued its upswing, peaking at 51,237 in 1900, although the city only held 5,673 of those residents. The city benefited from the railroad, from increased agriculture, and leading citizens who developed commercial, industrial, and retail enterprises. While segregation had reached a tense era, African Americans consistently remained a large part of the City of Sumter population and economy. In Sumter County, blacks operated 4,734 of the 6,597 farms in 1900, the year with the largest number of farms ever reported throughout the county's history. They also likely were part of the workforce for the 143 manufacturing establishments in the county, many of them located in the City of Sumter (U.S. Department of the Census 1900). Homes were built for all social classes of the citizenry and reflected levels of wealth and some attention to national trends in architecture. An era of modernization, industrialization, and relative prosperity, this period generated a many of the buildings that continue to populate the City of Sumter's built landscape.

The Reconstruction era was one of rebuilding for the City of Sumter. In 1869, the first fire department, the Sumter Fire Company, organized and used a pump that fit on various wells throughout the city for fire control. A few years later, an African-American firefighter unit, known as the "Wideawake Company," also organized. In 1871, a new road connected the City of Sumter to Columbia and repairs to the railroad helped to reestablish the city's markets. The Atlantic Coast Line Railroads, which brought both commercial and passenger traffic through town, helped the City of Sumter recover quickly from the war years. The newly freed slaves carved out new places in the economy, many of them establishing farms or working in tenant relationships with white landholders. Between 1870 and 1880, the number of farms expanded from 1,089 to 4,167. This rapid growth led to increased agricultural goods flowing in and out of the city of Sumter, where, in 1880, many of the 73 manufacturing companies in the county were located. The county's population also surged from 25,268 in 1870 to over 37,000 (27,058 African American) in 1880 (Ramsey and Green 1922:20; Morgan 1986:15; U.S. Department of the Census 1870, 1880).

The city attempted to replace buildings lost during the war and began with reconstructing the jail. Completed in 1868, the log building had heart-timbers 10 inches thick. Before the railroads were repaired, commerce continued with men driving wagons over the road between Columbia and Charleston to find supplies, but with the repair of the rails, the city was better equipped for the reestablished growth in it. The Sumter Opera House, completed in 1872, became the Town Hall as well as its cultural center. Houses were in such demand during this time that as soon as "the foundations of a house were laid, someone applied for it" (Gregorie 1954:276). Though cotton production and value shifted during the 1880s, Sumter served as a major cotton market and shipping center, due in large part to the railroads. In 1884, the National Bank of Sumter opened on Main Street, next to the courthouse. It prospered for several years, despite a setback when the cashier absconded with $50,000, the entire capital, in 1887 (Gregorie 1954:317). In fact, other banks soon opened to assist the booming town. The city also hosted several industries in the final decades of the 1800s, including a textile mill, cotton-oil company, Sumter Machinery Company, B.L. Montague Company, Sumter Hardwood Company (Korn Industries), Witherspoon Brothers Coffin Company, and an ice-manufacturing plant (Gregorie 1954:276-277, 329, 476, 478, 487; Good 2006:940).

Electricity and municipal water improved the city during the 1880s and 1890s, and new railroad lines connected the city to major transportation routes headed to Orangeburg and Charleston, capturing some of the trade headed to those larger cities. By 1882, a new branch line ran south from the main railroad, and within five years, another line led southeast from the main line, while a short branch ran north. The junction for the southern branches appears to be the same line that exists today, around the intersection with Harvin Street. Amidst the main and branch lines, there were numerous small rail spurs leading to various industries (Gregorie 1954: 483-484; Morgan 1986:15; Sanborn Fire Insurance Map 1894).

By the late 1800s, the city's commercial core at Main and Liberty streets boasted a dense streetscape of brick structures, and residential homes dotted the nearby blocks to the west and south. While churches and schools remained somewhat central to the main part of town, development continued to be centered around the railroad tracks and spread south. This development led to the growth of both business and residential districts. Industries also took advantage of the land south and east of town, which was very sparsely developed. During the 1880s and 1890s, new commercial buildings lined Main Street, and a new opera house and city hall opened in 1894. Most often two stories with brick or stuccoed façades, the commercial buildings sometimes had cast iron first story façades and parapet roofs with central pediments and heavy cornices. Symmetrical fenestration on the façades of adjoined buildings allowed in the only natural light, while façade-width awnings often stretched out over the sidewalk to shield pedestrians. Homes built during the late 1800s were most often one or two-story wood-framed buildings with front gable or intersecting gable roofs, asymmetrical façades, and prominent front porches. Vernacular examples of the Folk Victorian, Italianate, and Victorian architectural styles, these buildings were also typically clad in weatherboard siding, and sometimes, included lintels and vergeboards as decorative elements. Some older homes were modernized by adding Victorian features, such as the Andrew Jackson Moses House, which was "Victorianized" around 1900 from an I-house to a Queen Anne Style (Poindexter 1989:30-31, 71; McElveen 1995:4; Sanborn Insurance Map 1894).

Residences created a ring around the central business districts along Main and Liberty streets, but segregation and class distinctions played a role in the type of housing constructed at the turn of the century. Larger, ornate homes developed west of the area and north along Main Street, while in the southern part of the city, an area criss-crossed by railroads, small modest single-story, wood-framed homes were located on small lots. While the race of the inhabitants of some of these areas is unknown, at least one area southeast of the railroads had a structure listed as a "Negro Tenement" on an 1899 map. Homes near this structure were small, one-story wood-framed buildings, several of which lacked porches or any additions to the structures, suggesting they were built with minimal detail or ornamentation. The presence of a labeled African-American residence makes it likely that this was an African-American neighborhood, as the city and the rest of the state was strictly segregated by the late 1800s (Sanborn Fire Insurance Map 1899).

At the end of the century, the city's layout had developed a prominent commercial area blanketed by residential neighborhoods. The Sumter Telephone Manufacturing Company, which would become one of the largest and better-equipped telephone factories in the country, began in 1899. It was housed in a long brick building, which was the only one of its kind in the Southeast. A large wood-framed tobacco warehouse was located just off the railroad tracks. There were also several large wood-framed warehouses that belonged to the Lukens Lumber Company. The Sumter Cotton Mill, located one mile southwest of the courthouse, had a large brick building. There were some shotgun, wood-framed homes that dotted the land around the two-story mill and its nearby brick warehouse off of Council Street (Sanborn Insurance Map 1899). Stables and liveryes were located in warehouses west of Main Street.

The residential area of the city was very diverse. Further west of the stables and liveryes were one and two-story wood-framed homes and churches. Some of these homes had bay windows, suggesting a Victorian style. To the east of Main Street, above Liberty Street, residences with accompanying outbuildings, as well as churches were haphazardly placed. In addition to being wood-framed, some of the buildings shared similar footprints, and bay windows populated the area homes. South of Liberty Street, and further south below Bartlette Street, the density of both the commercial and residential development diminished. Several large, two-story wood-framed homes were scattered among smaller single-story homes. Irregular lot sizes and shapes throughout the area suggested that the larger, older homes once held acreage that had been subdivided throughout the years to accommodate incoming residents (Poindexter 1989:147; Sanborn Insurance Map 1899).

Perhaps in reaction to the City of Sumter's continued prosperity, as well as to national architectural trends, public and institutional buildings constructed in the early 1900s often feature stone and brick exteriors. Offering a sense of permanence and stability, masonry exteriors had already been popular in the City of Sumter's commercial district during the late 1800s. In 1905, the Sumter Hospital, later renamed Tuomey Hospital, was built with three stories, colossal Ionic columns, a heavy cornice, and a stacked stone exterior. In 1906, the city built a new courthouse, an impressive, rusticated stone and brick building with colossal columns along a recessed porch. The new post office building, completed in 1910, followed the trend with a coursed stone exterior, columns, and a recessed porch. The City of Sumter's new schools in 1904 and 1906 were similarly monumental, masonry buildings with Greek-Revival style façades featuring large porches. Churches built at this time used masonry but employed Gothic style features, including towers, lancet windows, and steep-pitched roofs. Many churches in the City of Sumter demolished their old wood-framed buildings to construct brick buildings in the early 1900s (Figure 5) (Poindexter 1989:40, 50, 56, 105, 107, 122-124).

The rapid growth of the City of Sumter in industry, commerce, transportation, and population generated some local unrest with the city's government. The change to the council-manage type of local government in 1912 revolutionized the City of Sumter. It utilizes a full-time qualified city manager employed by a city council, which serves as a board of directors in charge of policy decisions. The city's last railroad line was built, also bringing alterations to the city. This new line, the Seaboard Airline's branch that stretched to Bishopville and Hartsville, generated some shifts in the population and new developments clustered around the brick railroad stations similar to that of earlier railroads (Figure 5) (Gregorie 1954:402, 480; Good 2006:940).

Between 1900 and the 1920s, the City of Sumter continued to modernize in more ways than just the government. Main Street was paved for several blocks with brick in 1908, and the downtown commercial district hosted pharmacies, a music store, retail stores, dry cleaners, barbershops, banks, and clothing stores. Several industries in town greatly helped the economy, including mills and steel manufacturing by the B.L. Montague Company, among others. Several of these manufacturers were located in the south and southeast portions of the city, following the railroad line.

The early 1900s saw advances in community buildings including the construction of a brick library in 1917 and the Y.M.C.A., which had a “wholesome influence on the youth of Sumter” (Nicholes 1981:31). Newly built, large homes reflected popular architectural styles such as Neo-Classical, Colonial Revival, and Craftsman. Many of these populated the expansive lots on streets west of the downtown area, and filled in neighborhoods such as Hampton Park. In the north and south portions of the city, more modest, vernacular buildings were located on smaller lots including Bungalow and some Folk Victorian style homes. Meanwhile, some older homes in the City of Sumter were updated with the new styles including the Andrew Jackson Moses House, also known as the Moses-Williams-Brice House. It received another makeover in 1918 to appear more like a Craftsman home. This necessitated the removal of fretwork and other ornamentation (Nicholes 1981:31, 33-35; Poindexter 1989:71-72).

A period of construction and development in the educational arena followed the City of Sumter’s population surge at the turn of the twentieth century. The City of Sumter gained its first college in 1908. Morris College, authorized by the Educational and Missionary Convention of South Carolina (Baptist), offered elementary, high school, and college education for African Americans. Its inclusion of three distinct levels of education attests to the dearth of free schools for black children in the City of Sumter. Located north of the downtown area, it continued to expand its campus, especially during the late 1940s through the 1960s, when dormitories, an athletic stadium, a gymnasium, classroom buildings, and more were added. Both private and public educational buildings for white students were built every few years between the boom period of 1892 and 1924. Most often built with formidable brick façades, multiple stories, and formal entries, several of these schools populated the downtown area of the City of Sumter around the Monument Square area, on the corner of Washington and Liberty streets (Nicholes 1981:432, 429-430).

THE EARLY TWENTIETH CENTURY

In the 1910s, the City of Sumter gained a number of new establishments. Two large hotels, the Claremont in 1914 and the Imperial in 1913, were built near the railroad stations to receive incoming visitors. The Claremont reportedly had a “very good restaurant” and served as meeting space for various social organizations in town (Ramsey and Green 1922:19). Both multi-storied with brick exteriors, the hotels offered comfortable rooms for rail passengers. In 1920, the City of Sumter employed Mrs. Julia Lester Dillon as a landscape architect, the “only woman in the United States to hold such a position” (Ramsey and Green 1922:19). She was in charge of the Memorial Park, created in 1919 as a memorial to white soldiers in World War I and donated to the city. She was also responsible for planting about 415 trees along city streets. As automobiles replaced horses as transportation, the stables behind buildings along Main Street gave way to more buildings, and soon Liberty Street was lined with brick commercial buildings heading west and east from Main Street. Wood-framed homes of varying sizes continued to populate the city, especially to the west and south of downtown, while some areas, such as the neighborhoods surrounding Morris College, had lots available for new homes. The maturing trees planted along city streets offered an attractive setting for the City of Sumter’s expanding development (Figure 5) (Ramsey and Green 1922:20; Sanborn Insurance Map 1923).

In 1920, Sumter County had 43,040 residents, an increase of 4,568 (10.6%) since 1910. According to the U.S. census, an urban center had to have at least 2,500 residents, which made the City of Sumter the only qualifying urban center in the county. Mayesville, Pinewood, Wedgefield, and other small towns were classified as rural areas, and rural areas actually held 78.9 percent of the county's population, or 33,532 people. The City of Sumter had 9,508 residents and showed a greater increase between 1910 and 1920 than the rural population. African Americans outnumbered European Americans three to one in the county, which relied heavily on agriculture. At least 75 percent of the population was engaged in farming, and the City of Sumter was the central location for cotton warehouses and transportation along the rail lines. In 1920, the county had 49 manufacturing establishments, most of them located in the City of Sumter. Almost 80 percent of the City of Sumter's population by 1920 were members of the many Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopal, Roman Catholic, and Lutheran churches. African Americans had their own Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches, as the races remained segregated in worship, residence, and business. Black businesses developed near black residential areas; one area was concentrated along South Main Street (Nicholes 1981:25-28; U.S. Department of the Census 1910, 1920; Ramsey and Green 1922:30).

During the 1910s, agriculture proved to be an asset to the county, whose assessed value of taxable property increased 51 percent between 1910 and 1920 to a per capita wealth of $891.22. Agriculture generated over $14 million in value in 1920, while industries only generated $2,622,819. Many of the 4,897 farms were dependent upon cotton in 1920, and tobacco only just began to gain importance in the City of Sumter. Farmers soon began diversifying, and part of the catalyst for this change was the devastating boll weevil, which attacked cotton crops, and the inability of farmers to afford expensive machinery and fertilizer. The boll weevil invasion dropped the county cotton production from 54,000 bales in 1920 to 18,272 bales in 1921. Some farmers quit agriculture altogether and headed to the City of Sumter, where new industries needed workers, and by 1930, the number of farms fell to 3,684, the lowest number since the 1870s. The Sumter Creamery, organized in 1922, accommodated not only Sumter County farmers but farmers from all over the state who were increasingly turning to livestock products. The creamery handled milk, cream, butter, and ice cream. A new diversity in food crops helped the new Sumter Canning Factory, which also began in 1922, allowing farmers to process their products locally, making them ready for easy sale and transport from the City of Sumter (Nicholes 1981:25-28; Ramsey and Green 1922:31, 65; U.S. Department of the Census, 1870-1930).

While some industries flourished, by the 1920s, the economic boom the City of Sumter had enjoyed slowed, and the prosperity did not reach every citizen. To relieve some of the economic burden on the poor, the City of Sumter employed a nurse to care for the indigent sick and a "Poor House" off of North Main Street was set up for the destitute. The Salvation Army sent two workers from Florence to assist the needy in 1927, but they were "discouraged by the tremendous need and scarcity of funds" and returned to Florence (McElveen 1995:34).

Besides helping the poor, there were other changes in the city during this time. A tuberculosis treatment center, Camp Alice, was established by the 1920s on a five-acre pine grove hill. It was located a few miles west of the city on what is now Alice Drive. Located west of town close to the Alice Drive area, Hamilton C. Bland began a large flower garden in 1927. Bland supervised a city park in the same area starting in 1938, and it became the Iris Gardens, home to the Iris Festival. The City of Sumter welcomed the tourism and some individuals rented out their homes in an effort to gain some income during the Great Depression. Property owners on Calhoun and North Main streets advertised with postcards for tourists that featured their picturesque homes, including a Greek Revival, a Craftsman Bungalow, and a Spanish Eclectic style home (Nicholes 1981:473-474; Ramsey and Green 1922:30, 91; Poindexter 1989:182).

THE DEPRESSION AND WAR YEARS

While the Great Depression hit the entire state of South Carolina hard, the City of Sumter fared relatively well, even though there were some casualties, such as the Bank of Sumter. The city's diverse economy depended not only on the agriculture of the surrounding county but also the large amount of industry both in and out of the city. Factory owners continued to provide jobs, offering much needed work for the city's inhabitants. There were a total of 26 industrial plants in the city, including a textile mill, hosiery mill, canning factory, three bedspread factories, and a brick factory. The City of Sumter also hosted "four of the largest industries of their kind in the world:" the Palmetto Pigeon Plant, the Brooklyn Cooperage Company, Williams Veneer Company and the Williams Furniture Corporation (WPA 1941:266). Several industries served the entire state and beyond including the Witherspoon Brothers and Co. which fulfilled orders from as far away as Africa, as well as both Polly Prentiss, Inc. who employed 550 and had 32 products, including a variety of bedspreads, and the Coca-Cola bottling plant.

The lumber industry was also important to the City of Sumter during this time. The WPA guide noted that the City of Sumter was the "one of South Carolina's leading lumber areas, supplying several industries in city, and that "what textiles are to Greenville, furniture and woodworking are to Sumter" (WPA 1941:265-266).

The City of Sumter population grew along with the rest of Sumter County during the 1930s, with 11,780 citizens (30.3% of Sumter County's population) by 1940 (WPA 1941:267). Forty percent of the population was African American, and they lived in neighborhoods scattered throughout the city, many of them working at the manufacturing plants. The City of Sumter also had an exceptional percentage of Jewish citizens "of Spanish descent," who had long been prominent in business, government and arts. Despite the increase in population and while some industries thrived, the number of manufacturing establishments dipped from 50 to 40 from 1930 to 1940 (Poindexter 1989:143, 149, 152, 162; 166-167; U.S. Department of the Census 1930, 1940).

In an attempt to create jobs, as well as bring an economic boost to the country, state, and local municipalities, the federal government as part of the Depression-era works program, Federal Writer's Project, published the Guide to the Palmetto State in 1941. Offering snapshots of South Carolina locations in the early 1940s, the guide described the City of Sumter as an attractive city with an abundance of trees, "their branches interlaced across residential streets where comfortable homes, architecturally undistinguished, are set in well-kept grounds" (WPA 1941:256). At the time, the City of Sumter was the only one in the state to employ a civic landscape architect, and it proudly displayed its gardens and well-designed parks. While many of the homes did not overly impress WPA authors, they did note that many of the city's attractive homes and churches were along the road leading into town (WPA 1941:255). Interspersed between the furniture factories and their ever-present lumber piles, located southeast of the railroad, was "an occasional shabby old residence" indicating it "was once a fashionable neighborhood" (WPA 1941:256). Retail and service businesses also did well, and in the central business district along Main and Liberty streets, there were "practically no vacant stores, and its neat appearance and traffic regulations" was noted (WPA 1941:265). The city of Sumter also boasted two railroad depots, two hotels, and three "motion picture houses" (WPA 1941:257).

While industry carried the City of Sumter through the tumultuous Depression years, a major economic boon for the city came in the early 1940s with the creation of Shaw Field. Located seven miles west of the City of Sumter on Highway 76, the base encompassed 2,797.75 acres and was completed in 1941. When first commissioned, the field was used as a basic flying school before becoming a separation center for a host of men being released from the service after the war. Officially renamed Shaw Air Force Base in 1948, it not only supplied the nation with trained airmen but also provided the City of Sumter a nearby employer (Nicholes 1981:465-466).

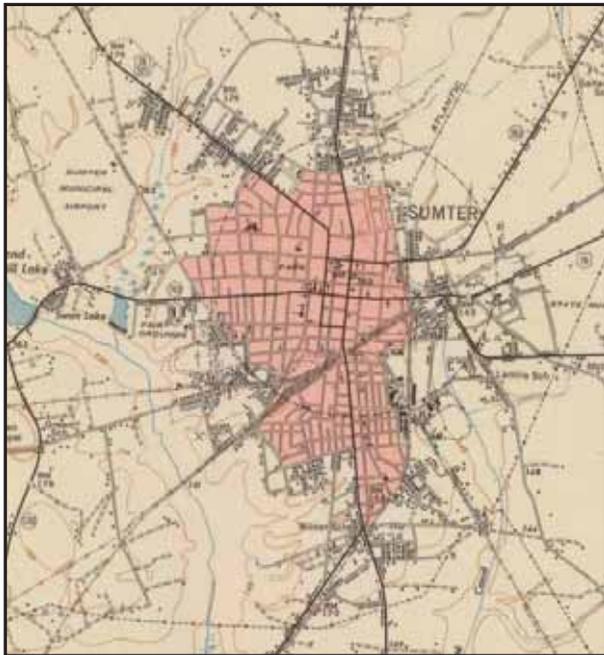

When finished, the base did not immediately affect the municipal boundaries of the City of Sumter. In both 1935 and 1946 (the years for which information is available), everything within a one-mile radius of the approximate courthouse location on Main Street was considered inside the city limits. Between 1935 and 1946, the growth of the City of Sumter included several residential neighborhoods lining both sides of Broad Street, beyond the city limits. Although the popular automobile allowed for neighborhood sprawl beyond the central downtown of Sumter, Main Street still held a high concentration of necessary stores, with churches and schools located only a few blocks away (U.S. Department of Agriculture 1935; U.S. Army Map Service 1946). As a main artery leading northwest from downtown towards the new Shaw Air Force Base, Broad Street was a prime location for new housing and commercial buildings. Small neighborhoods also sprang up in the east part of Sumter, within the city limits and to the east of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad. However, most of the growth was in the south part of the city and continued several blocks past the city limits. While some of the neighborhoods here dated to the 1910s and 1920s, they increased in density during this time, and new development continued along Main Street's southern route out of town. Commercial, professional, and residential buildings solidified the expanding City of Sumter communities (Figure 6) (U.S. Department of Agriculture 1935; U.S. Army Map Service 1946).

The new neighborhoods that were constructed between the end of the Great Depression to the beginning years of World War II along Broad Street, and in the eastern portion of the city, as well as neighborhoods that were expanded to the south, consisted of homes reflecting vernacular Bungalow styles. These homes were wood-framed, single-story buildings featuring front gable roofs and front porches. Minimal Traditional homes, with brick exteriors, cross gable roofs, and shallow eaves are also represented in the neighborhoods from this era. Both the Bungalow and Minimal Traditional house types are examples that reflect the nationwide trend exhibited at the time toward more modest building construction, with minimal ornamentation (U.S. Department of Agriculture 1935; U.S. Army Map Service 1946).

THE MID-TWENTIETH CENTURY AND BEYOND

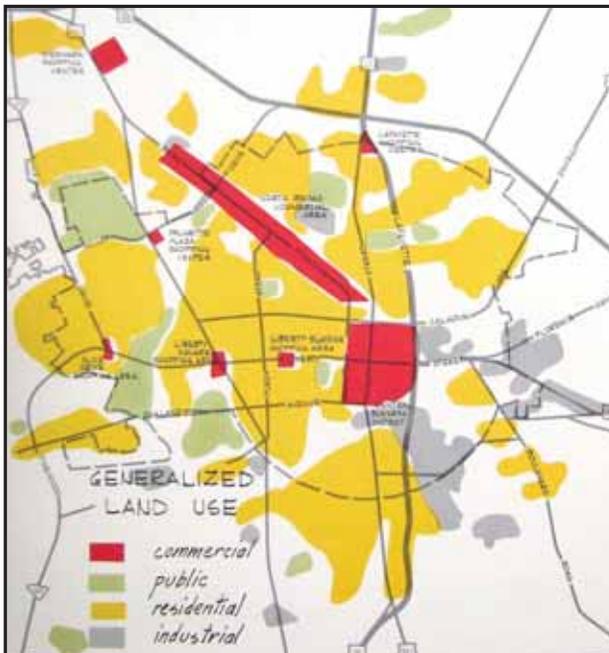

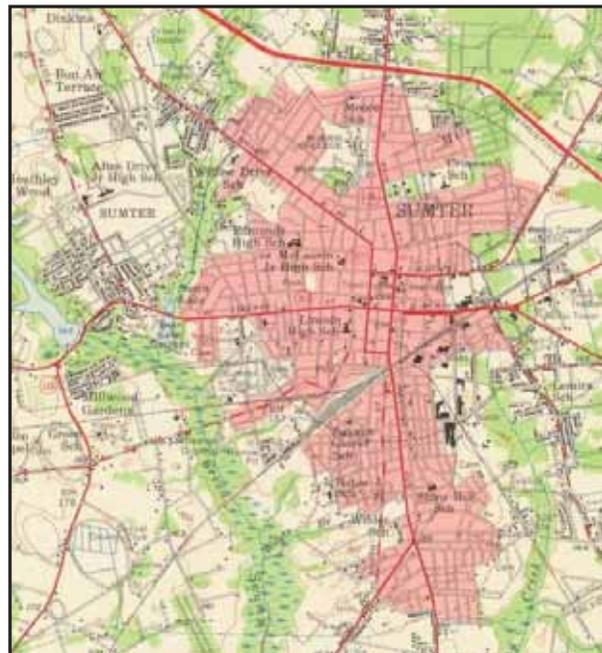

By the late 1940s and throughout the 1950s, a number of new neighborhoods populated the City of Sumter, a majority of them in the north and west part of the city. The county's population grew again in the 1940s, reaching 57,634 by 1950, and new suburbs were developed to keep up with the demand. Post-World War II neighborhoods were cut from large plots of land that was cleared, and then divided into streets and lots. These neighborhoods were given fanciful or attractive names and the lots were sold to eager new homeowners. In the City of Sumter, various mid-century subdivision plats included Bon Air Terrace in 1949, Burns Downs in 1951, Pinefield, Flowers Heights, and Wen Le in 1952, Edgewater in 1955, Folsom in 1957 and Audubon Park in 1959.

By 1959, the city limits were expanded to capture some of the new development to the north, northwest, and west of the downtown area; however, the limits did not expand south to capture the dense urban area located there. Other buildings populating downtown Sumter included new commercial buildings with modern 1950s exteriors, a high-rise apartment building on Liberty Street in 1950, and the Mount Vernon Inn motel in the early 1950s on Broad Street. The Mount Vernon Inn was one of several new motel accommodations to develop in the mid-twentieth century (Harvey 1997:38-39; U.S. Army Corps of Engineers 1959; U.S. Department of the Census 1950).

Sumter County's economy shifted dramatically from agriculture to manufacturing and military employment between 1940 and 1970. As the City of Sumter gained more industries and welcomed the Shaw Air Force Base, the number of people employed in manufacturing grew almost 100 percent in the 30-year period, from 3,244 in 1940 to 6,475 in 1970. The number of people employed in the military grew over 2,000 percent in the same time, largely due to the opening date of the base in 1941 and also from a dramatic increase in hiring between 1950 and 1960. Those employed in the military went from 1,389 in 1940 to 4,354 in 1970. Some of the shift in employment resulted in population increases for the City of Sumter, which grew from 15,874 in 1940 to 20,185 in 1950. The city added almost 3,000 more residents the following decade, but between 1960 and 1970, gained only 1,373 residents to total 24,435. Some of the growth of the city during the 1950s and 1960s is attributed to the annexation of already populated areas adjacent to the city (Santee Wateree Regional Planning Council "Land Development" 1973:31, 36; Santee-Wateree Regional Planning Council "Initial Reconnaissance" 1973:2).

The national movement to the suburbs witnessed a large number of white residents leaving central downtown cities for new areas miles outside of town. With automobiles, easy access to new highways and roads, comparatively large lots, and spacious homes, suburbia became an attractive alternative to aging, crowded downtowns. As residents moved further away from the central business district of Main and Liberty streets, new retail and service establishments followed. This loss of commerce concerned the City of Sumter, which hired a planning company to study the issue. The planners noted that the new commercial establishments only followed the new neighborhoods to the north and west of the City of Sumter, where the average income was higher than the average income in the city. A post-war phenomenon, shopping centers, such as Wesmark Plaza, located on Broad Street, and discount stores intercepted the trade headed for downtown. In the southern parts of the City of Sumter, also called South Sumter, there was a considerably dense residential population, as well as "poorly maintained wholesale and industrial buildings" along the railroad line. Residents in this older area were predominantly African American and had an income level that was less than the average for the city. They did not attract new stores like the more affluent neighborhoods. Planners hired to assess the city's commercial district issues proposed a radical plan: closing Main Street's main commercial block to traffic and making it a pedestrian mall. The mall opened in 1975 but was unsuccessful. The street was restored within a few years, but several of the key department stores on Main Street left the area for Jessamine Mall in 1980. Other retailers left and relocated on Guignard and Broad streets (Lyles et al. 1966:15, 30; McElveen 1995:28).

The City of Sumter gained two new highways in the mid-twentieth century. In 1959, Highway 76 was constructed north of the downtown, providing an east-to-west bypass around the city's business district through a sparsely developed area (U.S. Army Corps of Engineers 1959). In 1963, the state Department of Transportation constructed U.S. Highway 15, or Lafayette Street. This new highway was the first major north-to-south thoroughfare in the city, and eventually connected to two major transportation routes, Interstate 20 to the north and Interstate 95 to the south. The new highway cut a path along the east side of the city, through the southern part of the city, which had already developed dense African-American residential neighborhoods and industrial streetscapes of buildings and mature trees. The road and bridge removed housing on several east-to-west streets. It crossed over part of the historic Sumter Casket Company but eliminated the many lanes south of the railroad and the roads adjacent to the railroad, which were home to a myriad of small wood-framed houses and duplexes. The loss of these buildings interrupted much of the residential character of the area. Initially, industrial complexes remained relatively unaffected by the new highway, retaining their settings and continuing to dominate the landscape south and east of the downtown. Yet, they eventually suffered from diminished use and vacancies in the late twentieth century.

By the 1970s, the City of Sumter population continued to grow slowly. The largest employers were still the military and manufacturing companies, which employed 55 percent of the city's population in 1970. Service oriented jobs employed 27 percent of the population the same year, leaving only 18 percent of the remaining work force employed in professional, government, or institutional jobs, among others. The Santee-Wateree Regional Planning Council, an organization formed to coordinate planning efforts in the Sumter and surrounding counties along the Santee and Wateree rivers, generated several planning studies for the City of Sumter in the early 1970s. Their land use comparison for the City of Sumter versus the averages for American cities offers a snapshot look at the city's development and disparity with some of the averages. The table below summarizes their findings (Santee Wateree Regional Planning Council "Land Development" 1973:35).

Table 1. Land Use Comparisons of Developed Area

Land Use	Percent for the Average U.S. City	Percent for Sumter
Residential	39	44
Commercial	4.8	6.95
Industrial, Transportation, Communications and Utilities	10.9	12.61
Social and Cultural	19.6	11.38
Streets	25.7	24.78
Total Developed	77	32.52
Vacant	2	67.48

As evidenced by the Table 1, Sumter's percentages were somewhat elevated for residential, commercial, and the industrial categories, but comparatively low in the social and cultural category. Perhaps more telling, the total developed land in the City of Sumter was just 32.52 percent, less than half of the percentage for the average American city (Santee Wateree Regional Planning Council "Land Development" 1973:19).

By the late twentieth century, the City of Sumter's economy suffered from the loss of much of its large-scale manufacturing plants. This loss left large vacant warehouses standing empty and eliminated a major employment resource in the city. Again concerned about the city's wellbeing, the City of Sumter's leaders developed a "Neighborhood Revitalization Strategy Plan" for the South Sumter area in 1996. This area not only contains several of the large manufacturers but is hallmarked by a dense residential community that is mostly African American. The 1996 report noted that the area had “many abandoned, decaying, and poorly maintained businesses, mostly along Manning Avenue,” more than 60 vacant, deteriorated, or dilapidated residential buildings, some burned structures and overgrown lots and yards (Creech et al. 1996:6). Contributing to the poor appearance were unimproved streets, poor street lighting, and unkempt sidewalks. The city hoped a revitalization program aimed at improving housing and establishing new commercial enterprises and employment would reinvigorate the South Sumter area. In 1997, the City of Sumter also turned attention to the central business district and created the Downtown Sumter Revitalization Committee. This effort resulted in improved parking, landscaping, and building façades, and the results are still being felt today (Creech et al. 1996:11; Good 2006:940).

Like many cities throughout the South, the City of Sumter’s history and development is tied to its economy, and its periods of growth coincided with eras of prosperity. Driving through the city today, it is evident that as the city’s growth expanded outward, people built homes reflective of the era or of their personal tastes or wealth. Crowded with homes built in later years, older neighborhoods have an eclectic mix of building styles, shapes, and materials. Other streets have brief interludes of uniformity, with rows of buildings mimicking a general form and characteristic, such as an off-center front porch. A street map for the city proves that it grew as needed, with roads developed alongside the spreading development, and not necessarily in adherence to any grid or master plan. This created distinct smaller grids and wider avenue streets that serve as informal boundaries for neighborhoods that may or may not have formal names. The well-known Hampton Park neighborhood, a well-established and prominent community located around Memorial Park, is an example. The downtown business district on Main Street is listed in the NRHP for its importance to the city’s history. There are likely other areas throughout the City of Sumter, whether residential, commercial or industrial, that also relate the important stories of the city’s history.

The City of Sumter’s built environment includes commercial and residential buildings, historically African-American communities, educational structures, a major historical railroad thoroughfare, parks, large industrial complexes, and a variety of architectural styles. These provide a tapestry of historic resources that tell the story of City of Sumter’s past and present.

V. EVALUATION OF RECORDED PROPERTIES

NATIONAL REGISTER PROPERTIES, CITY OF SUMTER, 2010

There are currently eight properties listed on the NRHP within the survey area. They are listed below in Table 2 alphabetically, based on the historic name as shown on the most recent nomination forms. All of the properties are still standing and no changes are recommended in the existing boundaries. The Sumter Historic District was resurveyed and the results are discussed later in the chapter.

CARNEGIE PUBLIC LIBRARY

219 West Liberty Street

The Carnegie Public Library served as the City of Sumter's first and only public library from 1917 to 1968 and was one of over 1,600 public libraries built with funding from the Carnegie Corporation. Designed by local architects J. Herbert Johnson and N. Gaillard Walker, the Carnegie Public Library is a two-story, flat-roofed Beaux-Arts building. It is constructed of terra cotta brick with a brick veneer exterior and flat metal roof. The rusticated first story features a symmetrical front façade comprised of four arched windows flanking a central entrance. Brick quoins are located at the corners of the building and a parapet wraps around three elevations and consists of a limestone cornice supported by limestone modillions. The library was purchased by the Sumter County Museum in 1989, was renovated in 1993, and now serves as the Genealogical and Historical Research Center. The library was placed on the NRHP in 1994 in the areas of history and architecture.

THE HENRY LEE SCARBOROUGH HOUSE

425 North Main Street

The Scarborough House is a two-story Neo-Classical Revival home clad in weatherboard and topped by a front-to-end gable roof. The symmetrical front elevation has three bays with a central door on each floor flanked by two, one-over-one double hung sash windows. The upper story entrance opens onto a small balcony. A full front porch dominates the front façade and consists of exaggerated Corinthian columns supporting a pedimented roof. A cornice wraps around the porch and the perimeter of the house, under the roofline, and is decorated by simple modillions. Pilasters with Corinthian capitals are located at the corners of the front façade. The 1908 home was listed on the NRHP in 1995 in the area of architecture.

THE O'DONNELL HOUSE

120 East Liberty Street

The O'Donnell House is a gable-end, three-story frame Neo-Classical Revival house. Originally an Italianate house constructed circa 1840, it was moved from the Main Street commercial district to a lot on East Liberty Street after 1860. Remodeled in the Neo-Classical style in 1905, the house was transformed from a flat-roofed, two-story house into a high-style Neo-Classical residence. The O'Donnell House has a lateral gable roof, which created the third story, a symmetrical façade with central double doors, and a brick foundation. A full-height, semi-circular porch dominates the front elevation. Four Corinthian columns support the curved porch roof and cornice, which wraps around the house under the roofline. A parapet comprised of square posts and a turned balustrade tops the porch roof. The rest of the porch stands at one story in height and flanks the central, two-story section. Additional architectural details include exaggerated pediments over doors, Ionic columns, Palladian windows, and dentils under rooflines and cornices. Neill O'Donnell, a successful Sumter merchant, hired the nationally prominent architect Frank P. Milburn to make the extensive alterations to the house. The result was a house representing the epitome of the Neo-Classical Revival with massive ornamentation. Used as a funeral home in the mid-twentieth century, the house was saved from demolition in the early 1990s. The O'Donnell House was placed on the NRHP in 1996 in the area of architecture.

SUMTER COUNTY COURTHOUSE

141 North Main Street

The Sumter County Courthouse, constructed in 1907, is a two-story brick building on a raised basement story and faced in yellow Roman brick. The central entrance is through a recessed portico of six fluted columns, paired, of the Scamozzi order. Paired windows, each of which is flanked by narrower windows, flank the entrance. The second story features a small balustraded balcony and arched windows. Bays of windows flank the central portico and a stone entablature wraps around the perimeter of the building. A classical balustraded parapet wall of brick and limestone caps the building above the roofline. The courthouse was designed by architect William Augustus Edwards, who designed nine county courthouses in South Carolina, including the Sumter County Courthouse. The courthouse is part of the Sumter Historic District and was individually listed on the NRHP in 2004 in the areas of history and architecture.

SUMTER HISTORIC DISTRICT

Officially chartered in 1871, Sumter became a focal point for trade and marketing in the area due to its location in the central section of the state. Its downtown historic district honors the city's commercial heritage. The district extends down Main Street, from the County Courthouse to the Federal Building and includes one block of Law Range, East & West Liberty, and Caldwell streets. Consisting of 84 buildings, the majority of the commercial buildings within the Sumter Historic District were built in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century, during the peak of Sumter's prosperity. Notable historic buildings within the district include the Sumter County Courthouse, the Town Hall/Opera House, and the Federal Building. The Sumter Historic District was placed in the NRHP in 1975 in the areas of history and architecture.

SUMTER TOWN HALL/OPERA HOUSE

21 North Main Street

Located within the Sumter Historic District, the Town Hall/Opera House was built in 1893 after fire destroyed the original 1872 structure. The four-story Richardsonian Romanesque building is of brick construction with an Ashler-finished, Cumberland buff stone façade. A large, round arch marks the entrance. A four faced clock tower rises above the roofline, giving the building a height of over 100 feet. The Town Hall/Opera House is part of the Sumter Historic District and was individually listed on the NRHP in 1973 under Criterion C.

TEMPLE SINAI

11 Church Street

Constructed in 1912-1913, the synagogue is a two-story, Moorish Revival building clad in stucco. Castellated towers featuring domed roofs flank the central entrance. Cast stone octagonal columns surmounted by cast stone spheres support the entry portico. Ten Moorish stained glass windows adorn the building, with a round stained glass window above the entrance. The building has two historic additions, a two-story brick building built in 1932, and a one-story brick building constructed in 1956. The Temple Sinai was placed in the NRHP in 1999 in the areas of history and architecture.

THE WHITE HOUSE

421 North Main Street

The Elizabeth White House is a one-and-a-half story vernacular Greek Revival cottage. Constructed circa 1854, the house features a one-story porch with a pedimented roof supported by four square paneled columns and two pilasters. The front entrance is centrally located on the symmetrical façade and is surrounded by a transom and sidelights. An entablature, consisting of a cornice, molding, and frieze, wraps around the perimeter of the house. The house was the residence of nationally recognized artist Elizabeth White. The White House was placed on the NRHP in 1978 for its association with persons of significance and architecture.

SURVEYED RESOURCES

The survey recorded 2,007 properties in South Sumter, the Oakland Avenue neighborhood, northern Sumter, and the downtown Sumter Historic District (Table 3). Ninety percent of the surveyed properties were residential with commercial properties comprising eight percent of the total. The remaining two percent were churches, schools/colleges, and civic/social buildings (Figure 7).

South Sumter, an expansive and densely settled neighborhood, is located south of the main railroad corridor. The area surveyed included Sumter's Savage-Glover, Bates, and Stone Hill Precincts. The neighborhood is comprised primarily of dense residential housing packed onto small parcels. At times, multiple houses occupy single lots. Vacant lots were prevalent in this portion of the city with mobile homes often occupying parcels devoid of conventional permanent buildings.

The density of housing creates a streetscape consisting of fairly shallow house setbacks, which vary with the presence or absence of sidewalks, and small yards fronting closely situated homes. House types trend toward multi-family houses like double shotguns and duplex bungalows, while bungalows, shotguns, and saddlebags comprise a large portion of the single-family house types observed.

Manning Avenue serves as the main commercial corridor through South Sumter. Commercial parcels extend from Manning into the neighboring residential areas, and community stores dot the interior of areas largely populated by houses. Much of the commercial development along Manning consists of automobile-oriented businesses with parking lots situated in front, while the corner stores in the residential areas are pedestrian oriented, with entrances opening directly to sidewalks.

South Sumter features numerous religious properties. Though most of the congregations were organized in the early twentieth century and earlier, few of the church buildings examined were 50 years in age. These religious properties are scattered throughout the blocks of residential housing and serve as community landmarks. They range from large multi-building properties with open land surrounding the church to small single building properties on lots the size of the surrounding residential parcels.

The West Oakland Avenue/West Bartlette Street neighborhood is a turn-of-the-century residential area southwest of downtown Sumter and north of the main rail corridor. The areas examined included portions of Sumter's South Liberty and Birnie Precincts. Almost entirely residential, the neighborhood is framed by commercial corridors along West Liberty Street, South Guignard Drive, and the Sumter's Main Street commercial district. Larger, high-style residences are found along the main thoroughfares, such as West Oakland Avenue and West Bartlette Street, while smaller, more modest houses are interspersed between them and clustered in the southern portion of the neighborhood.

Like South Sumter, churches were observed among the residences and served as community landmarks. Many of the church buildings are not yet 50 year of age, but several featured buildings did meet the age requirements for survey like Mount Pisgah AME and St. Jude's Catholic Church.

Streetscapes in the West Oakland Avenue/West Bartlette Street neighborhood feature broader setbacks than those observed in South Sumter. This was largely due to the consistent presence of sidewalks on both sides of each street. Lots are generally larger along the main arteries of West Oakland Avenue and West Bartlette Street, and lots are smaller on the connecting cross streets. The streets and yards feature mature trees and landscaping reflective of a neighborhood rooted in the economically prosperous decades of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century.

Northern Sumter consists of an area situated between Broad Street and North Lafayette Drive centered on Riley Field and Morris College. The areas surveyed included parcels found in the City of Sumter's Morris College and Crosswell Precincts. Land use within this area is varied and includes civic, educational, commercial, and residential properties, as well as parkland. The area is anchored by several large properties surrounded by residences. These large properties include Crosswell Home for Children to the east of Main Street, Palmetto Pigeon Plant to the west on Broad Street, Morris College to the north, and a municipal water treatment plant and Riley Field located in the center. Commercial corridors are located along Broad Street and North Main Street. Residential streets occupy the remaining blocks.

The majority of the residential development in this area occurred after World War II. This was evident in the house types prevalent along Woodlawn Avenue and the blocks around the Crosswell Home for Children. Older house types were observed along streets like Church, West Charlotte, and Moise. These areas likely represent the earliest northward residential expansion of the City of Sumter's downtown toward Morris College. This earlier development features similar streetscape traits to those observed in the West Oakland Avenue/West Bartlette Street neighborhood, like sidewalks on both sides of the streets and generous setbacks permitting broader front yards and house intervals.

The streetscape of Church, West Charlotte, and Moise contrast with the later post-war development along Woodlawn and Carolina avenues where the lots were smaller and sidewalks are absent. The absence of sidewalks in this area of post-war development reflects the increased reliance on the automobile as the primary form of transportation. However, not all development from the 1940s and 1950s is devoid of sidewalks. The blocks surrounding the Crosswell Home for Children features house types, like English Cottages and American Small Houses from the post-war period and a streetscape that includes sidewalks. Pockets of worker housing were also noted around Brown Street and its cross streets. These collections of small bungalows were likely associated with commercial warehouses operations along the North Main Street corridor. The most intact examples of worker housing are those found on Katherine Court.

The neighborhood immediately north of the Morris College, along Stark Street, features later twentieth-century houses like ranches. However, lots featuring older house types are scattered in the cross streets and are prevalent along West Moore Street at the northern limits of the surveyed area.

Lastly, the City of Sumter's downtown commercial district was surveyed. Although the downtown area is already listed on the NRHP and two individually listed properties are located within its boundaries, individual records of each building were not recorded with the state. Additionally, due to the age of the NRHP designation, the boundaries of the district needed to be reevaluated to determine if any additional properties would now be eligible for inclusion.

The City of Sumter's downtown historic district is largely the product of the city's rise as a commercial and transportation hub in the decades around the turn of the twentieth century. The virtually continuous block of commercial fronts features ornate details in a variety of materials and styles. The rhythm of the streetscape is perpetuated by two-story storefronts anchored by landmark buildings like the Opera House, the former Bank of Sumter building, and the courthouse. Storefront façades feature classical detailing in masonry elements like brick, stone, and concrete as well as details in pressed metal. At street-level, entrances are often recessed between display windows. Some modern façades have been placed over historic fabric. These are largely comprised of aluminum or masonry elements like roman brick.

RESIDENTIAL BUILDINGS

Nineteen house types were recorded (Table 3). They include central hall, shotgun, saddlebag, gabled-ell, Queen Anne cottage, Queen Anne house, American Small House (Minimal Traditional), and Ranch types. Residential styles identified include Folk Victorian, Queen Anne, Craftsman, and Tudor Revival. The Craftsman style, by far, is the most common house style within the survey areas and the bungalow is, overwhelmingly, the most common house type composing 45 percent of the residential building stock. The following discusses the most commonly identified house types and styles found in the survey areas.

HOUSE TYPES

Central Hall

The central hall type consists of a single-story frame structure with a central hallway with two rooms on either side, a lateral gable roof, and two chimneys (Figure 8A). Most examples identified during the survey have exterior chimneys on the gable ends. A front porch consisting of a shed or hipped roof typically spans the front elevation. This residential type dates from the late nineteenth to early twentieth century and was found predominantly throughout South Sumter.

A. Examples of a Central Hall (Resource U/85/2185 and Resource U/85/0863)

B. Examples of Saddlebags (Resource U/85/0297 and Resource U/85/1382)

C. Examples of Shotguns (Resource U/85/08807 and Resource U/85/1036)

Saddlebag

The saddlebag house derives its name from a central chimney flanked by two rooms (Figure 8B). The house is square, typically topped by a lateral gable roof, and sits on a brick pier foundation. Saddlebag houses can either have a single central entrance leading into a vestibule or two entrances, one leading into each room. The examples identified primarily had a single central entrance. Comprising approximately four percent of the houses documented, the saddlebags in the area date from approximately 1900-1940. These houses are prevalent throughout South Sumter, including an intact row of 8-10 saddlebag houses on Bradford Street, just north of the railroad tracks (Figure 9).

Shotgun

Shotgun houses are characterized by a massing of one room wide and two or more rooms deep (Figure 8C). While most commonly topped by an end-to-front gable roof, a few examples had hipped roofs and were clad in a variety of materials from weatherboard or shiplap to asphalt roll or synthetic siding. Front porches are wooden and span the front façade. The type dates to the first half of the twentieth century and was found primarily in South Sumter, with a few examples located in the southern section of the Oakland Avenue neighborhood.

Queen Anne Cottage

The Queen Anne cottage is characterized by a square main mass with projecting gables and topped by a hipped or pyramidal roof (Figure 10A). The houses have interior chimneys and front porches with, most commonly, a shed roof that spans either the recessed section of the "L" or along both sections. Common architectural details include cornice returns and bay windows in the front gable. This housing type, dating to the early twentieth century, is primarily found in South Sumter and the Oakland Avenue neighborhood.

Gabled-ell

A derivative of the central hall plan, the gabled-ell type was found in the older sections of the survey area (Figure 10B). Gabled-ell houses are frame structures with a modified central hall plan; a lateral gable shaped into an "L," giving the type its name. The houses are usually sided with weatherboard or shiplap and set on brick pier foundations. Chimney placement varied between exterior chimneys located at the side gable to interior chimneys positioned at the ell-intersection. Porches were placed along the recessed section of the "L" and were generally shed roofed. Common architectural elements include Folk Victorian details such as spindlework porch details and brackets under the eaves. This type dates from the late nineteenth to early twentieth century and was located in the older residential areas on the outskirts of Sumter's commercial core. Many of the gabled-ells documented during the survey were difficult to identify due to extensive additions that altered their signature shape.

Queen Anne House

The Queen Anne house is a two-story version of the Queen Anne Cottage. The examples documented have a two-story, square central mass with projecting gables topped by a hipped, pyramidal, or, rarely, gabled roof. Amongst the small number of examples found in the survey area (only 1%), all featured elements of the Queen Anne style (Figure 11). Usually highly adorned,

The Queen Anne houses documented during the survey represent the Free Classic subtype with classical columns, heavy cornices, cornice returns, and Palladian windows. Dating from the late nineteenth century to the early twentieth century, the Queen Anne style houses were located exclusively within the Oakland Avenue neighborhood.

Two of the Queen Anne style houses are particularly noteworthy due to their unusual exterior material. One is located at 207 West Oakland Avenue (Resource U/85/1587), while the other can be found at 118 South Salem Avenue (Resource U/85/1557). The rusticated concrete block exterior gives the homes a masonry exterior and is even used for the porch supports. These are two of four houses that are clad in the masonry material.

Another Queen Anne style house within the Oakland Avenue neighborhood that has a notable association is 325 West Oakland Avenue (Resource U/85/1575). This is the home of Dr. Arthenia Bates Millican, a protégé of Langston Hughes and successful African-American female poet and author. The Arthenia Bates Millican home, located on the northeast corner of the intersection of West Oakland Avenue and Wright Street, has been the residence of the noted author since 1992. The property consists of the main house and a single outbuilding that once served as the kitchen but is now an office and repository for the author's works (Resource U/85/2180). Influenced by rural, southern African-American culture, Millican's writing was an important contribution to the Black Arts Movement.

Millican was born and raised in Sumter, attending Lincoln High School and later graduated Morris College, a historically black college. She began her working life as a high school teacher. In 1946, she returned to Morris as chair of the English Department. A year later, she attended graduate school at Atlanta University, receiving instruction from Langston Hughes in creative writing. After her graduate work, she taught for a period in Virginia and Mississippi before joining the faculty of Southern University in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. During this time, she published some of her most successful works. While teaching at Southern, she became the second African-American woman to earn a Ph.D. from Louisiana State University.

Arthenia Bates Millican's work embodied many of the philosophies of the Black Arts Movement of the late 1960s and early 1970s. Unlike the politics of the Black Power Movement, the Black Arts, or Black Aesthetic. Millican generally sought to establish a cultural identity unique to African-Americans through the arts. Millican's prose and poetry used vernacular speech and colloquialisms singular to blacks of the rural south. In her most famous work, Seeds Beneath the Snow, she presents snapshots of rural southern life set in the dialect of the people who lived it. After the publication of Seeds, she was compared to other Black Arts authors like Paul Laurence Dunbar, Charles Waddell Chestnutt, Zora Neal Hurston, and Thomas Hardy. Her works received critical acclaim from Alice Walker and Nikki Giovanni (Halleluiah Trails 2010).

In all, Millican published 10 works of fiction, four works of non-fiction, and 18 poems (included in various publications). Her critical and scholarly articles have appeared in Southern University Bulletin, Negro American Literature Forum, and CLA Journal. Her fiction has appeared in Black World (1971), Obsidian (1975) and Callaloo (1975). She received a fellowship from the National Endowment for the Arts for her story "Where You Belong" in 1976, and her work was included in the anthology Sturdy Black Bridges in 1979 (Halleluiah Trails 2010).

Bungalow

The bungalow house type and the Craftsman house style are linked due to the fact that many bungalows possess Craftsman details, such as overhanging eaves with exposed rafter ends, triangular knee braces, or battered porch columns. Such is the case in the City of Sumter, where the bungalow was the most re-occurring type identified during the survey (45% of the residential buildings) and the Craftsman style the most recognized house style.

The bungalow type was most often represented by an unadorned frame house with a front gable roof, a partial front gable roof porch, and overhanging eaves with exposed rafter ends (Figure 11). A widespread local variant of the bungalow located in South Sumter and the Oakland Avenue neighborhood is of frame construction with a gable roof and engaged hip-roof front porch (see Figure 11, Resource U/85/1710 as an example).

The Craftsman style houses in the survey area range from bungalows with basic Craftsman details to high-style examples (Figure 12). The majority of the Craftsman bungalows identified have gable, hipped, or jerkinhead roofs, large dormers, and Craftsman details, as described above. The high-style example found in the surveyed areas is located at 333 Church Street (Resource U/85/0641) within the Oakland Avenue neighborhood. The house has a symmetrical façade, engaged wrap around porch with paired supports, hip dormer, and tripartite windows. One of the more interesting architectural details of the house is the door surround, which mimics the battered columns commonly found on Craftsman style houses (Figure 13).

English Cottage

The English Cottage type is distinctive for its cross-gabled massing and front chimney (Figure 14). The cross-gabled massing is tightly held in a compact square or rectangular block, so the gables project slightly. A secondary front gable or recessed opening marks the entrance and the chimney is typically found near the entrance. The houses are either clad in brick veneer, asbestos shingles, or synthetic siding. Screened porches are commonly found on the side elevations. The house type is typically associated with the Tudor Revival style, as was found on the majority of examples within the survey areas. Tudor Revival details commonly found on the documented English Cottage types include steeply pitched roofs, brick veneer exteriors, and rounded doorways. The English Cottage type, comprising approximately four percent of the residential house types, is scattered through the Oakland Avenue neighborhood and is quite predominant in sections of Northern Sumter, especially in the Crosswell neighborhood along Victory Street.

American Small House/Minimal Traditional

American Small Houses/Minimal Traditional houses within the surveyed area are small frame structures with lateral gable or cross gable roofs (Figure 15). The exteriors are typically clad either in weatherboard, asbestos shingles, brick veneer, or synthetic siding. Most examples lack any architectural ornamentation, while some have classical door surrounds, dormers, or a side porch. This type, including approximately 16 percent of the residential buildings surveyed, was found primarily in Northern Sumter, where extensive post-World War II development occurred.

Ranch

The Ranch house type was constructed from the mid-1940s through the mid-1980s. Therefore, only Ranch houses built before 1963 were documented. The Ranch houses were primarily located on the edges of South Sumter and Northern Sumter, with a few examples of use as infill housing. The documented examples tended to be linear in plan with a low-pitched hip roof, brick veneer exterior, a large picture window, and usually one projecting bay (Figure 16).

RELIGIOUS PROPERTIES

The religious properties within the surveyed neighborhoods ranged from simple frame or concrete block buildings to large, two-story masonry churches. The front gable, corner tower, and double tower were the most common church types. Both South Sumter and the Oakland Avenue neighborhood have several churches scattered throughout the residential areas, while Northern Sumter and the Sumter commercial district had few to none.

Front Gable

While the majority of the churches have end-to-front gable roofs, these simple structures are ubiquitous in the surveyed areas, particularly South Sumter, which had the majority of small community churches (Figure 17A). Typically of frame or concrete block construction, these churches have a symmetrical façade and little ornamentation. An exception is the Good Shepard Episcopal Church (Resource U/85/0779) that has a gable entry supported by triangular knee braces, exposed rafter ends, and small faux buttresses.

Corner Tower

The key feature of the corner tower type is the projecting corner entrance tower that is topped by a pyramidal roof (Figure 17B). The corner tower churches within the surveyed areas have gable roofs, brick exteriors, and banks of windows down the side elevations. A notable example is the Emanuel Methodist Episcopal Church (Resource U/85/1274) in South Sumter.

Double Tower

The double tower churches feature two projecting corner towers, typically flanking the front entrance (Figure 17C). The tower can be the same height or different heights and have pyramidal roofs. These masonry churches are most often associated with African-American congregations and were found primarily in South Sumter.

EDUCATIONAL

A small number of educational properties were located within the surveyed areas. The properties consist of the Southside School, a front gable-type school; Lincoln High School and Saint Francis Xavier Catholic High School, two mid-century schools; and the Morris College campus.

Southside School

The Southside School is located in South Sumter and is a front gable school of frame construction (Figure 18A). The building has a bank of windows running down the side elevations, entrances at the front and back, and is clad in synthetic siding. The building was identified by residents as a former school, however, the plat map of the property indicates that it was originally a church building. More research is needed in order to pinpoint the original use of the building.

Lincoln High School

Lincoln High School, now the Trinity Lincoln Center, is a two-story mass plan with two-story additions on either side (Figure 18B). While the school was founded as an African-American elementary school in 1874, the historic core of the present building dates to circa 1925. The core has fixed pane windows with an awning window above and below the pane, brick veneer, and a large chimney on the rear. A one-story addition stretches perpendicular to the core building and has a gable roof, brick exterior, and exposed rafter ends. The two, two-story additions on the side elevations of the core building date to circa 1950. These additions are both of brick construction with a flat roof, four-light hinged windows, and metal canopies over double doors. A two-story stucco façade, circa 1975, spans the front of the historic core.

By 1921, the school was approved as a full high school and operated as such until 1969, when Lincoln High School merged with Edmunds High School to form Sumter High School. The former high school, located in the Oakland Avenue neighborhood, now houses Sumter Academy, a private school, and the United Way of Sumter.

Saint Francis Xavier Catholic High School

Saint Francis Xavier Catholic High School (Figure 18C) is a one-story, masonry school building typical of mid-century school design in the United States. Constructed circa 1950, the school has a flat roof, brick exterior, and banks of windows spanning across slightly projecting and recessed bays. The school has a central core from which two long corridors stretch out, creating an L-shaped plan. The school was originally built as Liberty Elementary School, and was then used as a special education school. In 1997, members from three separate dioceses founded Saint Francis Xavier Catholic High School in response to the news that Sumter Catholic High School would close. As enrollment increased, the high school raised the funds for a larger school building. By January of 2002, the school had raised enough money to purchase the former Liberty Elementary School building and renovate it. The high school moved in later that same year. Saint Francis Xavier Catholic High School is located within the Oakland Avenue neighborhood.

Morris College

Morris College is a historically African-American college located on the north side of Sumter. Chartered in 1877 by the Baptist Educational and Missionary Convention of South Carolina, the intent was to establish a theological and literary institute to train young African-American males for the ministry and to further the education of the African-American community. It was not until 1908 that the Convention was able to secure a site for the college in the City of Sumter. Named after Reverend Frank Morris, a pioneer leader of the South Carolina Baptist group known as the Rocky River Association, the college received a certificate of incorporation from South Carolina in 1911.

B. Former Lincoln High School
(Resource U/85/0699)

C. St. Francis Xavier Catholic High School
(Resource U/85/1850)

The institution initially provided elementary, secondary, and college level education, with the first Bachelor of Arts degrees awarded in 1915. Over the next two decades, the college dropped its elementary and secondary education programs, focusing its efforts on its four-year degree programs. The college has trained ministers and teachers, served African-American youth who otherwise would not have had an opportunity to attend college, and participated in general welfare activities within the community. It is also one of the few colleges established and operated under the auspices of African Americans.

The campus spans approximately two blocks north-south and three block east-west. A metal fence runs the perimeter of the campus, with the entrance at the corner of Brown and College streets. Since the campus is fairly small in size, closed off to thru-traffic, and has two large parking areas located near the entrance, Morris College is primarily a pedestrian environment. The campus has an informal layout, with the buildings fronting the loosely gridded streets and walkways through the campus. The buildings are not evenly distributed along the streets and have various setbacks. Additionally, no true historic campus center is apparent. The campus, as a whole, is minimally landscaped as trees, shrubbery, and other plantings are used as landscape features around the buildings.

Six historic buildings remain on the 20-building campus, with dates ranging from 1924 to 1954. In general, the buildings are two-stories in height, have a hipped roof, brick veneer exterior, and Colonial Revival details (Figures 19A-C). The exceptions are the Head Start Building (Figure 19D), a one-story bungalow that has been converted into a daycare facility, and the Brawley-Starks Academic Success Center (Figure 19G), a two-and-a-half-story brick and stucco building with Italianate details. The other two historic buildings, the H. H. Butler Building (Figure 19E) and the former Student Center (Figure 19F) are one-story massed plan buildings with brick veneer exteriors and hipped roofs.

COMMERCIAL

The commercial buildings in the surveyed neighborhoods were primarily clustered along main thoroughfares, as in the City of Sumter commercial district and Manning Avenue in South Sumter. Otherwise, small community stores were found within the residential areas in South Sumter. Larger warehouses, mid-century commercial development, and the Palmetto Pigeon Plant, a large pigeon processing plant, were documented in Northern Sumter.

Community Store

The community store type was found primarily in South Sumter, with a few examples in the Morris College area (Figure 20A). The one-story building type is typically of masonry construction and usually has a symmetrical façade, front gable roof, and parapet. An awning usually shades the front façade.

Sumter Commercial District, One- and Two-Part Commercial Block

The city of Sumter commercial district is an NRHP-listed district within the boundaries of downtown Sumter, as described earlier in the chapter. The majority of the commercial buildings within the district are two-part commercial block buildings, with one-part commercial block buildings scattered in between. Several of the buildings have undergone alterations, such as the application of stucco to the exterior or false aluminum fronts. The one-part commercial block buildings are modest, usually with an unadorned brick veneer exterior, recessed entrance, and a display window (Figure 20C).

C. One-Part Commercial Block (Resources U/85/1148 and U/85/1260)

D. Two-Part Commercial Block (Resources U/85/1171 and U/85/1247)

The two-part commercial block buildings range from simple brick veneer buildings with display windows and double hung sash windows on the second story to commercial buildings with classical details or an ornate pressed tin façade (Figure 20D).

Another commercial building type within the Sumter commercial district is the enframed block (Figure 20B). Usually two to three stories in height, the façade is punctuated with columns or pilasters. This commercial type was popular from the 1900s to the 1920s and was usually found on banks, public buildings, and institutions. The Bank of Sumter is a notable example of this commercial type.

Palmetto Pigeon Plant

Founded in 1923 by Wendell Levi, a local attorney and naturalist, and Harold Moise, an engineer, the Palmetto Pigeon Plant immediately became the largest squab farm in the world. Levi's interest in pigeons began during his service as a first lieutenant in World War I when he headed the U.S. Army Signal Corps' Pigeon Section. Levi is still recognized as a leading authority on pigeons, with his two books, The Pigeon (1941) and Encyclopedia of Pigeon Breeds (1965) still in print. Levi was also instrumental in developing breeds of utility pigeons that are used today throughout the world. The facility is not as extensive today, due to damages from Hurricane Hugo. Despite this, many of the original structures still stand. The facility is comprised of the Moise House, which is used as offices and a retail store, a grain storage and mixing building, mating buildings, killing and packing house, and a processing plant and holding cages (Figure 21). The Moise house is a Craftsman bungalow with a brick exterior, hipped roof, gable front porch, and architectural details such as exposed rafter ends and gable dormer. The pigeon holding cages, forced mating house, and processing plant are all frame structures with gable roofs and weatherboard exteriors. The killing and packing house and the grain storage building are both masonry structures. The grain storage building is a two-story building with a gable roof, parapets on the gable ends, and six-over-six double hung sash windows.

CIVIC/INSTITUTIONAL

Five civic or institutional properties were documented during the survey. Two of these buildings, the Sumter Town Hall/Opera House (Figure 22A) and the Sumter County Courthouse (Figure 22B), are listed individually on the NRHP and are described earlier in the chapter.

Federal Building

The Federal Building is within the Sumter Historic District. Built in 1907, the two-story building was built in the Neoclassical Revival style, faced in limestone, and has a terra cotta hipped roof (Figure 22C). Roman Doric columns run down all four elevations and paired brackets support the cornice. The Federal Building is currently used by the Central Carolina Technical College.

City of Sumter Water Plant

The city of Sumter Water Plant (Sumter Water Plant 1) was constructed in 1962 in the International style (Figure 22D). The two-story building, located within Northern Sumter, has a flat roof, brick façade, and eight-light hopper windows. Concrete panels are underneath all the windows. Horizontal bands run along the roofline and between the first and second stories. Concrete canopies are above the entrances and copper downspouts direct rainwater down the building.

Crosswell Home for Children

Established in 1935 by the estate of John K. Crosswell, a successful local businessman, the Crosswell Home for Children provides services for orphans and children with special needs. The property is comprised of 28 acres and contains eight buildings. Four cottages, administration buildings, and outbuildings make up the historic buildings on the premises (Figure 23). The four cottages, built circa 1940, are similar in plan and details. The cottages have an H-shaped plan with gable roofs, brick veneer exteriors, and six-over-six double hung sash windows. All the cottages have Colonial Revival details, such as gable dormers, side porches, pedimented entry porches, and fanlights over the front doorways. The administration buildings were built in the late 1950s to early 1960s. The main administrative building mimics the Colonial Revival details found on the cottages but is rectangular. The other administrative building is a Ranch with a hipped roof, brick veneer, and tripartite windows.

VI. RECOMMENDATIONS

NRHP INDIVIDUAL PROPERTIES

New South Associates surveyed 2,007 properties for the City of Sumter Survey. Of those properties, three individual properties were identified that appear to meet the eligibility criteria for listing on the NRHP.

Under Criterion C:

- 333 Church Street (Resource U/85/0641)
- 207 West Oakland Avenue (Resource U/85/1557)
- 118 Salem Avenue (Resource U/85/1807)

All three of these properties exhibit distinctive characteristics of a type (see Figure 13, Resource U/85/0641) and method of construction distinctive to the area (see Figure 11, Resources U/85/1557 and U/85/1807). The SHPO did not concur with the recommendation of eligibility under Criterion C for architecture for these properties but noted that more research may indicate that these properties may be significant in other areas.

A fourth property, the Emmanuel Methodist Church (Resource U/85/1274) at 421 S. Main Street, was recognized by the SHPO as individually eligible for the National Register under Criterion C. The property was cited as an excellent example of an early twentieth-century church associated with an African-American congregation in Sumter (see Appendix B).

NRHP DISTRICTS

After a reevaluation of the Sumter Historic District, it was found that the surrounding area contained mostly new construction and parking lots and held few historic buildings that would contribute to the district. Therefore, it is recommended that the district boundaries remain intact.

Four other districts are recommended as potentially eligible for the NRHP under Criteria A and C.

Under Criterion A:

- Morris College for events associated with African-American history and education.
- Crosswell Home for Children for its association with a locally prominent individual and its impact on the social history of Sumter.
- Palmetto Pigeon Plant's commercial complex is considered significant in the area of industry at the state level.

Under Criterion C:

- The Oakland Avenue Residential District is recommended eligible under Criterion C.

The SHPO did not concur with the above recommendation on Morris College citing a lack of architectural distinction for the college buildings and insufficient integrity for a historic district. The SHPO noted that while the Crosswell Home for Children, like Morris College, is an important Sumter institution, it does not appear to meet the criteria for eligibility as a historic district. In addition, while the proposed Oakland Avenue Residential District does have some architecturally significant residences, it lacks overall integrity due to intrusions and alterations to many of the neighborhood's houses. Therefore the proposed district was not determined eligible.

The SHPO did concur with the eligibility of the Palmetto Pigeon Plant due to its historic importance within the Sumter's business history and its place among pigeon enthusiasts, scientists, and squab connoisseurs at both the national and international levels. It has a well-documented history and possesses a high degree of integrity (see Appendix B).

POTENTIAL LOCAL DISTRICTS/DESIGNATION

The following are recommended for possible local district designation:

- Bradford Street Saddlebag Houses: a row of approximately eight intact saddlebag houses near the railroad tracks on Bradford Street in South Sumter.
- Katherine Court workers' village: a small cluster of bungalows in Northern Sumter constructed as housing for workers in proximity to a nearby warehouse.
- Dr. Arthenia Bates Millican House (see Figure 11, Resource U/85/1575) for its association with the African-American female poet and author. The house is under the stewardship of the Dr. Arthenia Bates Millican Literary Foundation. The Millican House was first evaluated for the NRHP under Criterion B for its association with the lives of persons significant in our past but it does not appear to meet the criteria. According to the National Register Bulletin How to Apply the National Register Criteria for Evaluation, in order for a property to be considered eligible under Criterion B, the importance of the individual must be determined as well as the length and nature of his/her association with the property and the identification of any other properties associated with the individual. More specifically, the person(s) associated with a property must be individually significant and have gained importance within his/her own group or profession. Additionally, properties eligible under Criterion B are typically associated with the person's productive life, reflect the time in which he/she achieved significance, and can include a person's home, business, office, laboratory, or studio. The Bulletin also recommends that, if applicable, each property associated with a significant individual should be compared to other associated properties to determine which best represent the person's historic contributions, as the best representatives are those associated with the person's productive life.

Arthenia Bates Millican is a significant African-American author, who made significant individual contributions to literature during the Black Arts Movement. However, upon assessing the properties associated with her life, the property on Chamberlain Avenue in Baker, Louisiana appears to be most representative of her productive life. She lived in this house while teaching at Southern University, earning her Ph.D. at Louisiana State University, and writing most of her prominent works. While the property in Louisiana qualifies for the NRHP under Criterion B, the importance of Millican to the city of Sumter and the importance of Sumter to her cannot be overlooked. As a Sumter native, she was born, raised, and began her educational and professional careers. Here, Millican touched the lives of many through her roles as teacher and author. Therefore, the recognition of her life and work can be made on the local level through such means as an historic marker or local historic designation of her home on West Oakland Avenue.

GENERAL PRESERVATION RECOMMENDATIONS

The following are some general recommendations for consideration by the community to expand their historic preservation efforts.

- Conduct a Phase II survey to complete the city inventory of its historic building stock. This historic resource survey has documented over 2,000 of the city's historic resources but many more remain in densely settled neighborhoods. Future survey plans should be designed with that parameter in mind. Maintaining an up-to-date inventory is an important tool that allows the city to better incorporate all of its historic resources into planning and development programs.
- Update locally designated Hampton Park Historic District and consider boundary expansion where appropriate.
- Enroll in the National Trust for Historic Preservation's Main Street/Better Hometowns Program in order to be eligible for grant monies, façade design guidelines, and assistance in promoting businesses and events in downtown Sumter.
- Expand upon the placards used in downtown Sumter by installing interpretive signage to mark a notable local figure's house or business or the local historical significance of a worker's community or entire neighborhood.
- Expand the history section of the City of Sumter's website to include twentieth-century history and development.
- Consider stricter zoning regulations to discourage poor residential housing choices, like mobile homes used as infill, and to retain the historic fabric of the neighborhoods.
- Organize driving or bus tours of the various neighborhoods throughout the City of Sumter, highlighting each one's unique history, development, and historic resources. The City of Sumter's eclectic architecture would make for a great vehicular tour that speaks to the city's vitality, the use of different architectural vocabularies, key house types, and historical information.
- Finally, consider incorporating more art into the residential landscape, using pieces designed by local artists or that are community produced.

CITY OF SUMTER HISTORIC RESOURCES SURVEY NATIONAL REGISTER EVALUATIONS

The following determinations are based on evaluations of the City of Sumter Historic Resources Survey by the State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO) of the S.C. Department of Archives and History. It is the opinion of the SHPO that the properties meet the eligibility criteria for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places. These determinations are based on the present architectural integrity and available historical information for the properties included in the survey area. Properties may be removed from or added to this list if changes are made that affect a property's physical integrity. Historical information that is brought to the attention of the National Register Coordinator/Architectural Historian confirming or denying a property's historic significance may also affect a property's eligibility status. The process of identifying and evaluating historic properties is never complete; therefore, the SHPO encourages readers of this report to alert the National Register Coordinator to properties that may have been overlooked during this evaluation.

National Register determinations of eligibility were made during and following a site visit to Sumter on August 10, 2010, by Andrew W. Chandler and Brad Sauls of the South Carolina State Historic Preservation Office.
